THE SEAS.
BY GEORGE W. FRENCH.
These breaking seas are those that I love,
That rise and ebb about the shore, O'er my life's path, from the outmost verge Of their submerged and hidden floor.
With all their glory, and their Power, and their majestic mien, They are a little better than the earth,
That lies beneath their feet.
I have not seen the like of them,
In any part of the world,
And when I look upon their Waves, I feel as if I were A little nearer to the Heaven above, and to the Earth below, than I have ever felt before.

POPULAR EDUCATION.

On the first page of this issue will be an article on Popular Education, delivered by a distinguished gentleman, and author of many of the articles in this journal. It is a paper of great importance, and one which should be read by every citizen of this State. The author is a gentleman of high standing in the community, clerk and parish, is one of the greatest proves his mind. He became a well-informed man, and ranked as a General, sent to Washington. He was one of the first to support the American Constitution. Roger Sherman, one of the great men of the old Congress, was a schoolmaster. He had no more than a common education, yet he became a great statesman. The Kings and Princes of Europe were in the dark ages, and did not know the value of education, because they did not know the value of their own minds. They were debauched, and made laws for their own pleasure. They were ignorant, and did not know the value of their own minds. They were debauched, and made laws for their own pleasure.

think it better for them to exercise the right of voting for Presidential electors, than to have the right of voting for Presidential electors. The people ought to be educated, and to be able to vote for their own representatives.

hours. This leaves five or six, or seven hours for recreation and reading or other labor. This is the amount of time which is left to the people after they have finished their school education. The author is a gentleman any discipline which would have prevailed but which, under such circumstances, might be furnished by the common school.

Of course, the case approved is impossible.
But if it is conceivable, it is pertinent to the purpose, and affluently illustrates the argument in hand. What, then, would be the state of society, if no such thing as through knowledge were any white to be found? If mental activity were confined only to principles to guide it, and permitted to waste itself upon partial and inadequate instructions! What, for example, would be the effect, if man had some little mat-tering of the leading art, and there were no one else in the world who could teach it, except from books and charters? The people could not, as Apollonius, detect and expose them. We find it difficult to make the supposition, because, in the actual constitution of things, the higher instruction, in its principles and aims, is constantly perpetrating the lower. The child begins with Newton. The primer contains fables which Aristotle never knew. This illustrates my doctrine, that the higher gives to the lower its true importance. It is difficult to see the materials for the mental activity which even the best education excites, and it protects that activity from the exessive influence of its own limitations and conditions which otherwise precipitate it. With the higher culture to furnish the food of the intellect, and the lower culture to furnish the materials for the mental activity which even the best education excites,
and it protects that activity from the exes-
conditions which otherwise precipitate it.

WHAT ARE YOU?
Beautiful stars
What are ye? There is my heart of hearts A forest that blossoms in the night Beneath the stars of a midnight moon
And I know not where the living light Is hiding from the world's eyes
The earth is beautiful in the night
The stars are beautiful in the night
The moon is beautiful in the night
The night is beautiful in the night
The world is beautiful in the night
The stars are beautiful in the night
The world is beautiful in the night
