HECIMOVICH WOWS FRIENDS AT ANNUAL MEETING OCTOBER 3

Dr. Gregg Hecimovich, department chairman and professor of English at Winthrop University addressed the Friends of Dacus Library at their annual meeting in McBryde Hall on October 3. His fascinating topic, based on his forthcoming book, was “The True Story of Hannah Crafts: America’s First Black Female Novelist.”

In 2001, Henry Louis Gates Jr. of Harvard purchased an African American manuscript entitled “The Bondwoman’s Narrative” and published it in 2002. The work became an instant New York Times best-seller. While Gates identified the author’s probable master, he did not locate the author who wrote under the nom de plume Crafts. Hecimovich’s book identifies that first, black female novelist and tells her life story. At once a detective story, a literary chase, and a cultural history, The Life and Times of Hannah Crafts discovers a tale of love, friendship, and betrayal against the backdrop of America’s slide into Civil War.

In his presentation, Hecimovich outlined how he consulted wills, probate records, census records, and a variety of other sources in his quest to discover the true authoress, Hannah Bond, a house slave that escaped from the plantation of John Hill Wheeler of Murfreesboro, N.C. in 1857. She eventually settled in New Jersey and became a school teacher.

Hecimovich tied the story in the novel in with the events of Bond’s youth and the Nat Turner slave insurrection that occurred in Southampton County, Virginia, in 1831, a scant 18 miles from the Wheeler plantation. Wheeler, as head of a local militia unit, apparently had some role in forcefully suppressing the potential spillover of the rebellion in his vicinity. As a result, averred Hecimovich, “Hannah understood the grinning skull behind her master’s smile.”

Hecimovich also found evidence of Crafts’ true identity in the fact that she actually referred to the Wheelers by name in her book, accurately identifying both slaves and other family members. However, these connections required a laborious effort on his part to eliminate other possible authors from among the slaves or

WE NEVER CLOSE... Dean Herring

I pen this squib right before the Thanksgiving holidays, and it brings to mind, of course, the holiday itself. It amazes me every year how we tend to squash Thanksgiving between scaring ourselves to death at Halloween and covering ourselves in gifts (and/or debt) at Christmas. Apparently, we have an aversion to taking time to say thanks. Let's resist that oppugnancy with élan, break that vice with a virtue.

Now, I realize we have just come off a difficult election cycle. I say "difficult" rather than the usual adjectives because I know that while this election was bad enough, our history is chock-full of election cycles that were so much worse. If your candidate or side didn't win, I hope you will still give thanks for the freedom that we luxuriate in to have these elections and these differences of opinion with startling regularity. Sure, it's tough when your side loses. But what makes America America is the willingness of its people not to hold grudges, not to name-call the winners or the losers, but to admit defeat, or enjoy victory, and move on to continue doing those things that strengthen this country.

The landscape for higher education and libraries remains uncertain, and that is why I want to take this time to say thanks to all our 'friends.' Without you, we could not do half as much as we do. Your gifts, whether large or small, make it possible for us to make certain changes and/or improvements in services that really make a difference in the intellectual lives of our students.

I think it only appropriate at this time to focus on our 'friends' because they are made up of Democrats, Republicans, Independents, and all the rest. All of us, no matter how we voted or whom we pulled for, have come together on this project—Ida Jane Dacus--and are making a difference in the thinking lives of students who attend Winthrop.

My guess is that there are enough of us who differ from one another politically as far as the East is from the West. But what is important isn't that distance but that our money is politically adiaphorous, politically neutral, and by pooling it together we accomplish something all of us can cheer about. Perhaps there's a metaphor in there somewhere?

So, once again, thank you. Thank you for joining this effort to make our library matter even more than it already does. Whether you give fifty cents, fifty dollars, or fifty thousand, thank you for making Dacus a point of your generosity. Just like every vote matters, so every dollar counts. All those politically indifferent dollars from politically engaged donors come together and make an enormous difference in what we can do for Winthrop students.

By the time you read this, Thanksgiving will be over and the Christmas rush will be upon us. I hope you'll take time to give yourself a pat on the back if you have joined with these other Friends of Ida Jane Dacus to make her strong for yet another year.

And if you're reading these words and feeling a little guilty that you haven't joined in to help us, there is still time! The donor 'polls' at Dacus never close.

Happy Holidays!

A NOTE FROM THE NEW CHAIR

Hello. I want to take this opportunity to introduce myself as the new Chair of the Friends of Dacus Library. I am a professor at Winthrop University and the costume designer for the Department of Theater and Dance and I have been a member of the Friends since I moved to Rock Hill eighteen years ago. Libraries have always been a central part of my life. One of the most special events in my childhood was when I received my first library card for the Houston Public Library. It opened new worlds to me. It was in the cavernous stacks of the old downtown library building that I first experienced the wonderful feel and aroma of books – and the promise of adventure, romance, dreams and hours of pleasure. I discovered the “We Were There . . .” series, the delight of “The Secret Garden” and the miniature world of “The Borrowers”. I devoured “A Wrinkle in Time” “The Island of the Blue Dolphin” and “From the Mixed-Up Files of Mrs. Basil E. Frankweiler.” These stories led to Georgette Heyer, Jane Austin, the Bronte sisters, Raphael Sabatini, Alexandre Dumas, among many other writers, and my living room soon expanded to glorious worlds beyond counting. My family have always been active supporters of libraries. When my grandparents retired to a small farming community outside Houston my grandmother helped to start, and then ran for the next 35 years, a store front public library which drew patrons from all over the area. She was honored upon her retirement for having shepherded multiple generations of rural high school students through the process of writing pre-internet era research papers and showing them the possibilities of Inter-library loans. My parents are not only constant patrons of their local library branch, but have long been active in the Friends of the Houston Public Library and their annual book sale. My siblings and I carry on this tradition by joining the local Friends wherever we have lived.

While, these days, I get a lot of my research images and information for my costume designs from on-line sources, I still love to search at Dacus. One of the real pleasures of library research is that while looking for one book I always find a dozen others that pique my interest. Nothing can ever truly replace the brick and mortar library building and the joy of being among all the possibilities to be found in all those books. A library is not a luxury but, rather, one of the necessities of life - and libraries need Friends. I look forward to this opportunity to help to promote awareness of the resources to be found at Dacus Library both for the Winthrop campus and the wider Rock Hill community. Perhaps we'll run into each other there.
