THE WINTHROP JOURNAL

General interest greatly increased the appearance of the weekly issue of the Winthrop Journal during the past week. Articles have been submitted in great numbers and The Johnsonian is privileged to add the word at least commendation in these columns.

This issue is well up to standard—of excellence. It is in itself a great compliment, since The Journal has in other years established for itself a reputation for literary excellence which it must not maintain. A plan of publishing a weekly paper of a pleasing variety—stories, articles, poems—reviews and a pictorial page will be used, which will appeal to the work to be so uniformly pleasant that there will be no need to choose the best of it. Perhaps the first real difficulty with the fact that The Journal is in its one language the best and best of our education. We have great interest and can read good books, live in a beautiful condition. The day has passed when we go into classes, where we are exposed to the knowledge of the ages, which we later will yield back in a more precise manner on tests and examinations. Now, really does all this affect us is to be shown by the way we present the Johnsonian writer with creative work of our own, by our passion for creative expression, which is a form of criticism or appreciation, of the best works, books, etc. In the current issue "Kate's Loan at the Lost" by Mrs. Wills, is a treat. It is a story of a situation, with a plot which has been potent—suggestive, simple, a poem again a glimpse of the student of "Miss in Arizona," or musical, a play. These contributions express an originality and wit, a beauty, which is the student's experience, and is the unmistakable thing in our mind.

The Journal does a splendid thing in presenting to us creative work, which is distinctly suggestive about us. If the material is offered it can be considered, for it is effective. In the opening of the year our campus thought, we may be proud of our achievements.

The student of life looks upon the world as a theater of his studies, in which he beholds the performances of the great actors of the world. In the words of an old proverb, he has seen many a young student standing by the doors of the university, doors which have been closed to them, and has perceived them to be used now against the enemies of truth and science. He can see the sacrifices of students who are at once; he can hear the sound of the bell, and on the steps of the university he can see the students with their books and their pens. He can see the university's work carried on in the halls of the university, and he can hear the sound of the bell, and on the steps of the university he can see the students with their books and their pens. "Why the Chimes Rang" was presented at the regular Y. W. C. A. service on Wednesday evening. As the beautiful story was being read by Miss Pattie Haselden, the curtains were drawn back to reveal tableau representations of the principal events of the story.

Those taking part in the tableau were: Leonora Arthur, Totsie Buchanan, Vivian Edwards, Eliza de Saussure, Maud Wotford, Daisy China, Evelyn Sheider.
