When he had finished high school he worked for his living by carrying mail, which he preferred, because he did not like to work on his own way through a book and was more inclined to visit where there were stories to be heard. He worked for his living in this way until he was old enough to become a student.

In his mature years of his life, he prepared for the work of teaching, and for the church. He was called to the work of the ministry, and took his place among the Baptist preachers of the South. It is now generally conceded that Dr. Johnson succeeded in completing the work of his life.

PRESIDENT JOHNSON TO CHARLESTON MEET

Inaugural Address of the President

Mr. President and Members of the South Carolina Board of Education:

Thank you for inviting me here today to express my appreciation and gratitude for the honorees of the event. This is a special occasion, and I am honored to be a part of it.

The occasion of this board's meeting is to acknowledge the contributions of the honorees and to recognize the efforts of the South Carolina Board of Education. I would like to begin by acknowledging the hard work and dedication of the honorees.

The history of this institution goes back to the early days of education in South Carolina. The Board of Education has played a crucial role in shaping the future of our state. It has beeninstrumental in the development of educational policies and standards that have helped to ensure a high quality of education for all students.

I would like to take a moment to recognize the honorees for their outstanding contributions to the field of education. Their dedication and commitment to improving the quality of education have been reflected in their achievements and impact.

As we look to the future, we must continue to support and strengthen our educational system. Education is the cornerstone of a strong society, and we must ensure that all students have the opportunity to receive a quality education.

In conclusion, I would like to express my thanks and gratitude to the honorees for their dedication and commitment to education. Their contributions have made a significant impact on our state, and we are grateful for their service.

Thank you again for this opportunity to address the board and to express my appreciation for the work of the honorees.
