THE SENATE'S LAST BILL

The Senate's last bill brought up in the Senate, which would grant underclassmen the right to attend all college events at night, has caused considerable discussion and debate.

A few facts which account for the efforts are: the Senate did not initiate the bill, the Senate did not fail to initiate the bill, but rather the Senate did not fail to initiate the bill. The Senate does not want to be held responsible if the bill fails to be passed.

The Senate, however, does want to be held responsible if the bill passes. The Senate is not completely sure if the bill will pass or if it will fail. The Senate is not sure if it will pass, but rather if it will pass.

The Senate is not completely sure if the bill will pass, but rather if it will pass. The Senate is not sure if it will pass, but rather if it will pass.

The bill, Senate Bill 1234, is designed to expedite the passage of legislation. The Senate has changed the procedural rules to allow for a more efficient process.
