From The Red-Cross Work Room.

A letter has been received from Divisional Headquarters in Atlanta, planning the Red Cross workers of Chester for the winter months. Supplies recently shipped by this chapter.

Such frequent statements have been credited about the Red Cross refusing to accept payments, that some rather timid women who would have liked to work for the chapter here, were afraid that they could not "see nice enough for the Red Cross."

Such rumors have absolutely no foundation in fact and are repeating them is aiding and abetting the Pro-France element that is so fastidious that it refused the Red Cross, affects American efficiency, since the Red Cross is the only channel through which our surplus in France can reach the needy.

At the recent Red Cross Convention in Columbia, Miss Julia Grant, representing the Woman's work of the Atlanta Division, stated that not a penny's worth of our surplus has been received in Atlanta that could not be put to some use.

This work of making hospital supplies and other articles is the most important and will be carried on continuously by this chapter, but plans are being perfected for the lines of work also.

So many lines have our hopes been raised to wood by the knitters, that it has just now to look as if there will be a supply in the Red Cross work room, next Tuesday night.

Another work that will be inaugurated immediately is the making of artificial Christmas trees.

When we are told that half of the Red Cross workers in America are working in the home, and that we have divided into three divisions, the work could go on day and night, that even though they could not do any more, they could still be of the battle line in France, surely every woman in America wants to lend a hand.

Many of these divisions are very unmade, but the numbers needed calls for many helpers.

Thanksgiving

We are once more called upon by our President to observe our great national holiday. And all of us should heed this summons. This year, in particular, it is our duty to appreciate the many blessings bestowed upon us and to give thanks for them.

It may seem that in the midst of this great war that our causes for thanksgiving are few. But think of the reasons you have for giving thanks—and think of our reasons as a nation. Our President's proclamation clearly shows that, even in these trying times, we have a great many things to give thanks for. We should all of us observe this day and celebrate it in accordance with time honored custom.

This store will be closed all day on Thanksgiving. We are truly thankful and intend to observe the day. Please accept our sincere wishes for a happy Thanksgiving Day.

BRITISH SOLDIERS REACH CAMP SEVIER

Washington, Nov. 21.—Brazilian Ambassador De Gama, halted at the entrance to the state war and navy building this afternoon, threatened to strike the guard with a cane according to the usual story. The ambassador had no card or pass and was held until a negro messenger from the department offices identified him. De Gama was then permitted to pass in.

Since the war opened the door guard has been wasteful and will not pass any one without credentials. It is not regarded likely that diplomatic complications will result from the incident.

The Stimulus of Necessity.

There are many natures, as we know from observation if not from personal experience, that never come to a realization of themselves until they meet with opposition or even failure. So long as life comes easy to them, as it were, and they manage to get along very well with what they have they do not, as a rule, show their real powers of accomplishment. It is only when they meet with a certain kind of opposition that they come to themselves and discover for the first time their latent forces. New strength comes under the lash of adversity and even in the face of discouragement they become stimulated by the rebuffs which they may have received that they are ready and eager to leave anything in order to demonstrate what they really can do. When a man is put upon his mettle he does things which before would have seemed impossible; it is not so much a question of whether he will or will not accomplish certain results as if that he must accomplish them, and he would preserve not only his own self-respect but also the respect of others. The man who never succeeds in life never cuts anywhay, and as a consequence is not regarded very highly by the circles in which he moves. Such a man may or may not affect the peace of mind of the average person, but to a man of even limited ambition it does not appear while he may manage to get along very well for a time without their regard, sooner or later he becomes upset under his own disappointments and the lack of consideration and actual rebuffs he receives from those about him. At last the exasperation comes and he realizes that it has been largely through his own fault that he has attained the undesired position which he holds and animated by the rivalry, lack of confidence, or even veiled insults which may be offered him his hidden energy springs to the front and he enters upon the new activities which will make a man of him.

It means everything when a man comes to himself and begins to realize his own possibilities. He sets them no limitations, but eagerly and adventurously seeks to further his aims to an unlimited degree. Does he succeed? Without doubt, even if he does not accomplish everything that comes out of the that there is a chance that he does achieve some good results. It is an encouragement of itself in addition to the knowledge that he is beginning to find out for himself his real worth and possibilities. Much depends upon the motive behind a man's activities whether or not he meets with success, because as a rule, wherever there exists a motive that is strong enough, or an emergency, there is no sufficient hidden powers of accomplishment develop to meet the responsibility. However, there is no sufficient incentive to bring out the best that lies within him the chances are that he will not make a success of the undertaking at hand. He will make only weak-hearted efforts and will, naturally, accomplish nothing; in other words, he will continue to remain in a state of passive acquiescence in the usual conditions of his life. Just as soon as conditions make it imperative that he should change his method of living and awaken to his best interests just then, and not before, will he become his natural responsibilities and respond to the promptings of the new life which he begins to feel. It is a pity that a man wastes so much time before he realizes this fact, but as a rule, as long as he believes he is handicapped he is likely to forgo all opportunities that come his way simply because he is afraid that he will not succeed. When, however, necessity, or abuse, or the compulsion of him to redeem himself he rushes forward and carries everything before him in spite of his handicaps. The son of a rich father, who does not feel the necessity to make good, seldom puts forth the same efforts and the same determination that a poor boy does. He is awakened to his opportunities and realizes how much depends upon him. Handicaps, as the world goes, are not always handicaps; poverty, for example, has made it possible for men in all periods of history to rise to the top ranks of the community. It is very plain through the stimulus it affords them. Had it not been for the hardships which poverty necessitated, or for the continual lash which it laid, there are men everywhere today who would not have attained their present high position. Ordinary hardships perhaps have developed a proportion of their natural ability, but the stimulus of necessity did more for them than all riches and worldly power possible. The struggle to do something worthwhile, the very efforts we put forward in such an undertaking, even when we reserve powers in such a way that while we are fighting, notwithstanding our defeat, we are progressing by degrees. This is, indeed, very few failures, fails than the stimulus of necessity.
