The prospects for the next few years are not very bright. The market is not showing much enthusiasm, and the orders are not coming in as they should. The price of wool has been steadily declining, and the manufacturers are finding it difficult to make a profit. However, the situation is not hopeless, and there is still hope for a recovery. We must remain optimistic and work hard to improve the situation. In the meantime, we must conserve our resources and be prepared for the worst. The future is uncertain, but we must be ready for anything that comes.
Subject Combinations in High-School Teachers' Programs

(Thomas J. Kirby, State University of Iowa; The School Review)

Much has been written in recent years on the problem of choosing the most suitable combination of subjects for students preparing for teaching careers. The present study was made as a part of the program of research of the School of Education at the University of Iowa, in the field of high-school education. Through State agencies in charge of training high-school teachers, the present writer obtained information regarding combinations of high-school subjects taught by high-school teachers in the State of Iowa.

The study was made possible through the cooperation of the State Board of Education of Iowa, in The School Review.)

As was to be expected, the most frequent combination of subjects found in the programs of the high-school teachers was English and mathematics. This combination was found in about 25 per cent of the programs.

In addition, the writer made a study of the programs of the high-school teachers, with the intention of not only determining which combinations were in use, but also ascertaining the job specifications to the highest degree possible. The writer attempted to answer the question: what high-school teachers do, in concrete terms.

The writer believes that the most suitable combination of high-school subjects for prospective teachers is the one in which they teach a variety of subjects, including English, mathematics, science, social studies, and art. This combination is most suitable because it provides a well-rounded education for the prospective teacher, and it is likely to prepare him for a variety of teaching situations.

In conclusion, the writer recommends that high-school teachers be given a well-rounded education, including a variety of subjects, so that they may be better prepared to meet the demands of their profession.

Julia A. Hill, Postmistress
Among the many interesting stories on the Winthrop campus, Miss Julia A. Hill, college postmistress, stands out. Miss Hill has been associated with Winthrop in her present capacity for the first time in the summer of 1940. Before that time she was simply the superintendent of the postoffice and supply room. During the Summer session she is serving the college in this office and every day has a new story to tell to the inquisitive and with eager eyes to watch Miss Hill, the Postmistress, going to work.
