The article on Dr. J. Marion Sims, published in the South Carolina Medical Journal, December 1, 1883, highlights the pioneering work of Sims in the field of gynecology. The article discusses Sims' contributions to medicine, particularly his work on vesico-vaginal fistula and his innovative surgical techniques. It also mentions the establishment of the Sims' Experimental Institution in New York, which was a significant advancement in the treatment of women's health.

The article includes several quotes from Dr. Sims about his medical work and his dedication to improving the health of women. It also mentions the financial support provided by Dr. G. M. B. Baldwin and Dr. H. E. H. Pinkney to assist Sims in his work.

The article concludes with a message of gratitude from the South Carolina Medical Association, expressing their appreciation for Sims' contributions to medicine and his dedication to the health of women.
Is Your Son or Daughter Going to College?

By ETH B. RALLS, in MacG. Magazine.

All young people should be encouraged to go to college. But if or unless they do, it is important that they learn to make the best of the education that they do get. The problem is, what education is best? There are various ways of answering this question. Each one has its advantages and disadvantages. But it is important to remember that the best education is the one that is suited to the individual student. This is true whether the student attends a college or not.

If there are not too many students at your school who can afford to go to college, there may be a choice between attending a less expensive college and staying at home. If you are one of these students, you should consider carefully what you can afford to do. You may be able to earn some money while you are in college, but this will not be enough to cover all the costs of living. You may also be able to work part-time, but this will not be enough to help pay for your tuition.

It is also important to remember that the education you receive will not be the same if you stay at home as it would be if you went to college. There are many different kinds of education available, and each one has its own advantages and disadvantages. You should consider carefully which one is best for you.

The most important thing to remember is that the education you receive will be the one that is best for you. If you are not sure what this is, you should talk to your parents or to your teachers. They can help you make the best decision for yourself.
