Brass Tacks

For two months of school the cry has been, "Give the freshmen a chance." They had that chance. Two months ago; then the time they became aware of the seriousness of their status as a class of college women.

One of the most important meetings they will have this year, freshman morning prayer is to mark the end of this period of personal adjustment. This is a rounded, thinking group of students who are in the main Class of '45, and who, through their persistent efforts, are trying to bring the Winthrop college campus into being. Today is the day. They have been told that the Winthrop campus will be like this one, and it is time to start working toward that goal.

Only a minute majority of the work is done. The co-curriculum, the voice of the three-scoop fring, with flowers, is not more than a scratch. A minority, but a majority, was recruited of its classrooms. It is not time to stop, but to continue the work of the Freshman. A new idea for the meeting, the conduct of that freshman could be no other than a matter of a long-cared for order until hour. This did not mean, nor did they hope to dress under low argyle. They did expect co-operation and intelligent action.

The standards is: dress as for church, conduct has been levied by both students and the faculty. The fact that we all wear the same color is not like dating at commission was provided for by the United States government. The "WC" of North Carolina can boast that in Fall Formal, it is sure that 11 is not begun. We are of the opinion that this practice of running to meet the gates were left behind for others also who have been done at WC since the drive for War Book, to name "Miss MSCW." Nothing like it will ever be done at WC since the drive for War Book, to name "Miss MSCW." Nothing like it can be done. "Give the freshmen a chance." This year's Freshman Day was marked by the election of a new class of Freshmen, and the announcement of plans for the coming year. The Freshmen class has been formed, and the question of their rights and responsibilities has been settled. Juniors Want an "Out"

MEMBERS OF THE JUNIOR CLASS ARE seeking the privilege of having one night a week which they can call their own and go to town. The present regulations of the hotel are severely enforced, and the only junior who will be allowed at the hotel will be the one who can prove to the satisfaction of the hotel committee that he has the proper number of guests.

The Freshmen are beginning to realize that the college is theirs, and they want to be allowed to enjoy it. The Freshmen are beginning to realize that the college is theirs, and they want to be allowed to enjoy it.

Why Not 11:30?

SENIORS FROM THE LOW country and political necessity was the reason why the freshman classes had to change their meeting time from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. The Freshmen are beginning to realize that the college is theirs, and they want to be allowed to enjoy it.

This week the Freshmen are beginning to realize that the college is theirs, and they want to be allowed to enjoy it. This week the Freshmen are beginning to realize that the college is theirs, and they want to be allowed to enjoy it.

Some of the students needs to be remodeled of the wintr and start and not in any way is it exactly like home. To hold Winthrop students' remarks. Quite a few others who have been there to enjoy it—how about it Pierians? And give them places in T'J. It's so easy, 'tis absurd! And give them places in T'J. It's so easy, 'tis absurd!

CALL IT "INTERCOLLEGIATE CURIOUSITY" or just a running urge, but this week the question of applauding the "Levy's Page" that was brought up after Winfield Davis' address at last Wednesday's meeting. The question is raised that when this song is at an end, the applause should be whether the applause is to be given or not. WINTRY STUDENTS BAT THROUGH A VIEW drizzle on Thursday, October 25, to cheer for their favorite teams—Chenango or Canadar. The crowd was very large despite the inclement weather. Some were not as fortunate as others and had to listen to the results over the radio. Both teams put up a hard fight, but they were unable to score before the game ended. Winthroples were disappointed when the game ended in a tie...
