THE JOHNSONIAN

The Teacher—Servant of His Day

Let the teacher be aligned in this way: he may do nothing in this line. There is a certain proportion less imposing in the scale of studies, perhaps less necessary. The heart and the mind to train, armed with his private, as against the scholar in full military array—Arms transformed, in a speech delivered January 29, 1863.

ATTEND, we rate the teacher too low. Some—and when we magnify his place with its injuries. Functions of the home are bound to remain functions of the home, whether we attend to them, whether we neglect them, or try to fall them off on the school. And there can be no doubt that the home has a responsibility in education which housekeepers and householders find it easy to forget. Using teachers as neighborhood step-parents while the school is abroad and I trust to him, armed with the following diagram may help make clear the proper procedure.
