On Senior Exams

The heated discussions by seniors concerning the no-final-exams-for-seniors plan, an initiative intended to alleviate the academic pressure on seniors, have been ongoing. The plan eliminates final examinations for seniors who meet certain academic criteria, allowing them to graduate without taking the exams that are typically required.

There were two main concerns about the plan. First, some seniors were worried about the quality of their education. They argued that final exams were essential for assessing their understanding of the material. Second, seniors who felt they needed to take the exams to improve their grades or to meet family expectations were concerned about being unfairly disadvantaged.

Despite these concerns, the plan was implemented, and many seniors found it to be a significant relief. It allowed them to focus on their future plans and career goals without the added stress of final exams. However, it also raised questions about the fairness of the assessment process and the potential for grade inflation.

Re-Activate Yourself

As in the Student Government Association’s current initiative, the KAANAPOLIS speaker, Michael J. Nakama, emphasizes the importance of re-activating and engaging students. By participating in campus activities and organizations, students can develop new skills, expand their network, and find a sense of belonging.

The speaker encourages students to explore different clubs and organizations available on campus, such as cultural, service, or social groups. He reminds students that these activities are not just for entertainment but also opportunities for personal growth and development.

Questions and Discussion

What question do you have about the no-final-exams-for-seniors plan? How has it affected your senior year? Would you support a similar initiative at your school?
