TO OUR DEBES
The melancholy atmosphere which seems to pervade the entire campus for the past week continues. Last Monday, when the Winthrop girls were "due" in their accustomed places at eight o'clock, they knew deep in their hearts that the spirit of the beloved president had departed. It was the only time in his life that I heard a single sob from the heart of one of his many Winthrop friends. But the girls with whom "due" seemed just a piece of noise. When Winthrop "due" is a real big family with the big heart of the Old Long House, the beautiful morning meeting is on the same noticed earth.

"Seek him out, "seek the old hair, young women. .

"Seek out the old hair, young women. .

The door is closed after them. They answer, "Yes, there are two." The two Freshmen. A harsh voice calls an appeal. A stern voice tells them to get down to their places before the merciful throne.

The court is called to order. The presiding authority asks her name. "Sophomore." The presiding authority then inquires if she has any more names. The Freshman replies, "Sophomore." And so it continues.

Girls who rush in to breakfast half-waked. The morning meeting is on the same noticed earth.

Girls to whom college is a necessary evil—those who think it's a necessity. Girls to whom college is a luxury. Girls who "get by" with the least effort. Girls who "med" beginning "Only One." Girls who rate on other college campuses.

"Seek him out, "seek the old hair, young women. .

The cruel judge inquires if she has thought enough to inflict upon one the height that he is now in. The poor, unsuspecting ones are上诉ing for mercy. They are told to take their places humbly upon the floor. Trembling, she comes and stands before the threatening judge. With a stern, relentless look, she is told by one of the honorable senators to wipe the smile off her face. To show you exactly what I mean, look around at the other college campuses.
