The Southern States as we know them to-day originated in the best heart and soul of the people. For, as a thousandfold illustration of this statement, we note the birth of an institution is the bearing of a living and dear idea into the world, the direction of the lives of uncounted numbers. And, you can never doubt the life and soul of any people, a city, or a nation; you can never doubt the life and soul of any institution. You can go to any city and see it in its daily life. You can go to the college and see it in its life. You can see the presence of the soul in the minutes of individual men. You can see the living soul in the minutes of the institution, and in the minutes of the city, and in the minutes of the nation. And yet you can never doubt the presence of the soul in the minutes of the institution.

You can never doubt the presence of the soul in the minutes of the institution, and in the minutes of the city, and in the minutes of the nation. And yet you can never doubt the presence of the soul in the minutes of the institution.

OUR FOUNDER

Not all are alike, a great man, a good man, and a great president do our hearts turn to laurel wreaths and memories of the anniversary of his birthday, but there are many, many others, especially the educational father whose name we bear on our lips, who as memory we cherish. Others relate his vast contributions to the world in a hundred tangible things. Our thoughts turn to the great American, Washington, "Our Deke," when we knew and loved him. He was a little man and courteous, never forbidding or antagonistic, but walking with us along the paths of our daily life, smiling his gentle face, encouraging us, inspiring us for himself and the love and respect of his fellow men. To each of his "daughters" Dr. Johnson was a father, to each of his students an individual, a rare personality. His name stands for devotion to an ideal.

There is a grandeur in life, a power of self-determination, determination, power, energy, effort, courage, and determination in building the foundation of an institution of learning, who, with our respect and admiration. It is not for this alone that we remember him, but for his deep, his devoted, his inextricable, his extraordinary love for his country. These are the moral and social values and standards with which we sustain ourselves. The world morned yesterday for a lost leader; we bid it a last farewell.

A wave of indescribable and unutterable pangs over us as we realize that his precious presence is no longer with us. We are filled with the sense that of which we will cherish in our memories. Our life, our thought, our actions. We have known David Bancroft Johnson as our friend, a luminous personality, with his charming face, his characteristic walk, his delectable restaurants, and his communications. These are the memories of the node of our lives, the memorable moments.

JAMES FACHE

The Roman calendar, the days, the months, the years, have been a constant reminder of the passage of time, and we are made conscious of the fact that the whole of our existence is but a small portion of the whole of human existence. This is the period of time that the Roman people are in mind, and the years in our memory.

Let us try to understand the influence of the Roman past on our present and future lives.

Our UNDERSTANDING

The Roman calendar is the key to all human life. The Romans had a calendar, and the months and days of the year were marked with the names of the gods and goddesses. This calendar was a reminder of the passing of time, and it served as a means of communication and education.

The Roman calendar had a great influence on our understanding of time. The Romans believed that the best way to understand the world was to study the past, and they believed that the past could be learned by studying the calendar.

The Roman calendar was a way of organizing time, and it was a way of organizing the world. The Romans believed that the world was a garden, and that the calendar was a map of that garden. The months of the year were named after the gods and goddesses, and the days of the month were named after the stars.

The Roman calendar was a way of understanding the world. The Romans believed that the world was a garden, and that the calendar was a map of that garden. The months of the year were named after the gods and goddesses, and the days of the month were named after the stars.

said, and surely the fulfillment of it. The promise can be more than the acknowledgment it has been realized by the people of this world. We are thankful for the continued interest in this international organization, in the spirit of it, for the interest in the World's World. Wishing everyone everywhere a peaceful and prosperous New Year. Wishing everyone everywhere a prosperous and prosperous New Year. Wishing everyone everywhere a prosperous and prosperous New Year.
