GENERAL NEWS

Atlantic City, N. J., Feb. 20.—Will H. Taylor, of Washington, D. C., addressing the annual convention of the Photographers' association of the Middle Atlantic states here today, declared that if girls want to be beautiful in a photograph they must not powder their faces. He said powder flattens the expression and obscures the lines necessary to bring out beauty and character in a photograph.

New York, Feb. 20.—Famine exists in Siam because of exports of rice today, declared an expert of "unprecedented amount" of rice last year, according to advice received here today by the President's board of foreign missions. War conditions which have raised the price for rice made it so profitable to export it from Siam that virtually the entire crop was shipped out of the country, he stated, and two-thirds of the present crop has failed.

Onancock, Va., Feb. 20.—Mystery surrounds the identity of occupant of an airship which plunged to earth near Exmore this afternoon. The machine was demolished and two men were removed from the wreckage by members of a freight crew passing at the time of the plunge. The freight was stopped and the crew members extracted the man, one of whom was seriously injured. Both were taken aboard the freight and at Exmore the two men were put aboard a north bound express train. They refused to reveal their identity.

Washington, Feb. 20.—Supporters of General Obregon, candidate for the Mexican presidency, and authorities at San Luis closed last Saturday night in a pitched battle in which a number of the Obregonistas were killed, said advice received today in Washington. The city was thrown into a panic and many on both sides wounded in the fighting which lasted until about one-half the advice received here by mail, said.

New York, Feb. 20.—Mrs. A. Devers of Chicago, the first American mother to bring back from France the body of her son who died in battle, arrived at the city on the steamship Britania. Her son, James Devers, who was in naval service, died of injuries received in action on the beach at Bellefleur. The casket, draped with the American flag was escorted with military honors from the pier to the Pennsylvania station to be taken to Chicago for burial. The night before, Mrs. Devers provided a motor truck for the journey across the city after an undertaker had demanded $45 for a hearse.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 19.—While Mrs. Anna Vreeland, No. 182 Spruce street, was busy in another room, two of her children, John, six months and Jerome 17 months old began playing with a wash-bowl. Sidney put Jerome in the bowl and put the water on the floor. Jerome could not get the lid off because it was too heavy. Mrs. Vreeland was also unable to pry it off. The frantic mother then she bolted and ran to the side, to a barber shop, two blocks. The barber could not budge the lid. Patrolman Spillner turned the bolt or upside-down and Jerome's weight pried off the lid. Jerome was unhurt. Mrs. Vreeland fainted.

West Chester, Pa., Feb. 19.—Chesley Williams, aged 19, of Russellville, Pa., awakened after sleeping continuously for 35 days, the sleep sickness having followed an attack of influenza. The case caused much speculation among physicians who visited Williams. He took but little nourishment during the long nap, and is quite weak, rapidly regaining his vitality. He was awakened twice during the continuation of the attack and then but for a few minutes.

Gastonia, N. C., Feb. 21.—(Special)—Leadership in the South in the textile industry has gained a new place in the textile world. As well, Spartanburg County, S. C., leading the South in weaving and now Gaston county, N. C., leading in the number of spindles and also crowded Hillsboro county, New Hampshire out of fourth place in the country. Mills with 7,500 spindles. Providence Falls, N. H., is second with 1,700,175 and Middlesex county, Mass., is third with 1,062,715. Gaston county is just over the line in North Carolina, has 1,022,835. Gaston county has nearly four mills of which forty-one are in Gaston county.

TO FIGHT BOLL WEEVIL

Conference of Cotton States Entomologists So. — Clemson College, Feb. 19.—There was a three day meeting of cotton state entomologists at Vicksburg, Miss., and Tallahassee, Fla., beginning March 1, with headquarters at the National Park Hotel, Vicksburg, Miss., according to Prof. A. F. Conrad, entomologist. It is hoped that it will be convenient for the various horticultural inspectors and commissions of agriculture to attend this meeting, the object of which is to formulate ways and means for handling the boll weevil situation and other important crop problems in the South in 1920. At this meeting there will be a thorough conference on the question of cotton dusting for the boll weevil, with thorough consideration of dusting machinery. Included in the program are sweet potato weevil, the pink boll worm and the European corn border problems. Not only have we before us at the present time of the most injurious insect problems, but there are also introduced from foreign countries that require serious attention by all states.

Washington, Feb. 22.—Major Raymond W. Pullman, superintendent of Washington metropolitan police force, died at his home here tonight of double pneumonia after an illness which began several weeks ago. Major Pullman is well known for his advocacy of various reforms in police administration and in the connection with many affairs in the annual quadrennial parades.

TOOK HER LITERALLY

"What was his present, dear?" "Was it a pearl brooch or a bracelet?" "Was it a diamond tiara?" "It was a fair fiancée's eyes which later had to do with glowing attention, great moist." "It wasn't anything," she replied. "Oh, the thought, I say is, my dear, I told him I'd love him just as much if he didn't get me anything— and so he did!"

WOMAN'S WILL

The Worth While Life.
Very few persons agree on what constitutes the worth while life, and no amount of reasoning or persuasion can ever change certain of their convictions. The very things that mean so much to one person would be unendurable to another, not so much because of the nature of the things themselves as because of the personal viewpoint. We are all cast in very much the same mould in general, yet we are, and for this we have much to be thankful vastly differently temperamentally. If we were all exactly alike we would agree on all suggestions as to the presumed, and this fact alone would take away much of the spice of life and remove from our reach many of the opportunities which for reasons of our own seem so very worthwhile. A beautiful scene appeals to the artist, an enchanting melody to the musician, a problem in chemistry to the inventor, in his laboratory, a social function to the woman of fashion, and so on down the various paths that lead from one individual tendency to another. We look to those who are more or less expert in their particular field for guidance when we try to understand their principles, and perhaps we realize that our very glimpse something of the reason for their enthusiasm, but we know in our hearts that we would not change places with them, and that we are satisfied with our own ideas of what makes life worthwhile. Of course we make mistakes very often and through ignorance or inexperience as in the case may be we squander time and energy in following false leads. But the experience is not wholly in vain because it teaches us their true value and helps us to make better progress in the future. In later years we see vividly just where we made our worst mistakes and just where we redeemed ourselves. The general trend of our ideas, our ambitions, our hopes remains the same throughout life as a rule, but it is in giving them expression that we demonstrate our fitness to make good use of them. There are few lives, indeed, that do not contain something which makes them worth while; and this fact should be an encouragement to those of us who sometimes become depressed and inclined to the belief that we are not possessed of those blessings and personal endowments that make life worth the living. It may be that we are too much interested in seeing for ourselves that others do their duty by themselves to afford the time to look into our own condition, and because we fail in this particular we fall in our duty to ourselves. To live a really worthwhile life we must grow in moral, mental and physical power, not only along the lines that we may have marked out for ourselves but also along the new lines that varying, and often unlooked for conditions develop from time to time. If we cling to old ideas entirely and fail to keep abreast of our opportunities we do not make very pronounced headway. There is such a feeling of combining the old with the new and the old with the new and the old with the new that we are directed all toward the achievement of a high plane of living. We cannot accomplish very much unless we have a purpose in life, something that will make great demands upon our vital energies. No goal we set for ourselves is worth very much unless we put ourselves wholeheartedly into its accomplishment and even though the object in view is simple there must be the great factor of enthusiasm present to make it entirely successful. When we achieve one object we shall naturally look about us for another, always choosing only those things that give worth spending ourselves upon, worth working and striving for, worth giving freely of the best that is in us. Sometimes it happens that the things that we are forced by circumstances to strive for do not seem to mean very much. Perhaps they do not, but we learn to live largely through the efforts we expend in the fulfillment of our high purposes and in the effect of those efforts upon ourselves. The sacrifices we make are the corner stones upon which we build, although at the time we may not know it. The aftermath of the year to come however, illumines many dark places in our lives the reason for which, we have never quite understood. No matter how hard the conditions may be nor how far removed we may suppose ourselves to be from the heart of life, its pulse beats nevertheless, and in it we must anticipate and after a while we learn that, viewed from all standpoints life, indeed, seems to be very much worth while.

Preparing for the Springtime.
With the budding spring days not so very far away most of us are already beginning to take stock of our own condition and to feel ourselves looking for the silent influences that sweep down upon us when winter begins to take down his signs and close up his gates for a time. Unconsciously, too, we begin to look to the old tree that stands close to the side of the porch and watch for the brown buds that even now are beginning to bulge just a little on the slim stems upon which they rest. Soon they will begin to take on a semblance at least of form and after a while in God's time they, too, will respond to the mighty influences of the new season just coming to birth. During the cold months we do not know very much about the beauty of the great out-of-doors except in those cold climates where snow and ice paint their incomparable white pictures everywhere. But in the milder climate to which we are accustomed we fall to draw inspiration from the withered foliage and bare limbs of bushes and trees. We know "underneath" so well how to deck ourselves in the rich green draperies of spring and summer. It may be because of these simple facts and those of us who while we enjoy the bracing, cold, weather and feel all the better for it, yet yearn for the balmy springtime, when old Mother Earth, in a softened mood, yields a portion of her jewels for the enrichment of her children. It is rather a singular thing how we can be so near to the beauty which we have never given thought to the mystery of the changing seasons, and especially to the springtime for which we yearn so much. There are so few children, comparatively speaking, who are mindful of the miracle that is being worked about them, so few who have had their attention directed to the fascinating period when Nature puts on new spring clothes, decking herself in delicate vines of feathery greens that gradually grow into leafy fabric and later, on into rich glistening silks. A child is likely to take the changing season as a matter of course; indeed, how could it be otherwise the miracle unless its undeveloped mind were aided and guided in the task? An elm tree just at this season is a book of wisdom and delight to the normal child if the pages are turned for him one at a time. The laurel tree at the corner, with its luxuriant foliage, ever green, painted the early afternoon sky, seems almost like a thickly embroidered pattern on a scarf of blue. Would a child see the simple unless they were pointed out to him? And there are merely two instances out of a thousand that could be made interesting for the juvenile mind and impress upon it in an unforgettable way some of the miracles which are worked each year in the early spring months. It seems as though the very earth itself is anxious to throw off the "necessaries matter" that has collected during the winter in order to make room for the new season. No matter how clamor for an outlet, can we grow up, not learn a lesson too from the springtime? Do we not feel at the end of each winter that we are standing the success and adversity we may have enjoyed, as well as the sense of work well done, we have a great deal in ourselves that we would like to rid ourselves of, not because it is unnecessary but also because it is an obstacle to our present duties? No thrifty, careful housekeeper will let the old winter and the interests of the winter overlap those of the spring. She knows well to give her house the overhauling which housekeepers will let the old winter live at peace with herself and her family, she knows that if she expects physical comfort, and mental refreshment, she must rid the house of its unnecessary clutter and let in the breeze and fresh air to revitalize and refresh its inmates. No thrifty, careful man who has regard for his work in life, and the part he is to play in the small world that he calls his own can afford not to put his house in order too, not merely for the interest and the pastime it may afford but for the special purpose of "keeping up" with his own life. He must have peace of his own and ambitions or else he is not the average man. He can work on these plans and try to fulfil these ambitions unless he clears away the cobwebs from his brain? And how can he do this better than by battling steadily against the forces that may seek to bind him down, so that he may be free to advance and make room for his hopes and ambitions? Let him be that more of the spirit of spring gets into our beings than we realize, and that just as Nature opens the way for the countless miracles of trees and flowers and all her beautiful handiwork, so, too, must we try to open the way for the plans that we have in mind, even though they may not always work the miracles to which we aspire.

CHESTER MAN—NURSES "FLU"
The following letter was received from the Red Cross Chapter of Rock Hill and will be of interest to Chester people:
Rock Hill, S. C. Feb. 20, 1920
To The Chester News,
Chester, S. C.
My dear Sir,
Mr. Samuel W. Orr, of your town has been here in Rock Hill for the past few weeks nursing for the A. R. C. and has done such splendid work he has made many friends during his sojourn. At first he did private or special nursing, but for the past several weeks he has charge of the Emergency Hospital which is being run under the auspices of the A. R. C.
At one time, there were twenty three convicts in it ill with flu and pneumonia, others from the town. Some of them were very ill and we felt several owe their lives to his faithful and untiring service.
I thought you would like to know these good things of your fellow townsman.
Thanking you,
PULL FOR CHESTER

I am very truly yours,
Mrs. Lillian Hennaman.
Death Of An Infant.
Sunday morning at three o'clock death claimed little Katherine McDowell Douglas, the eleven week old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Douglas. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. J. E. Purcell, pastor of Trinity Presbyterian church, Sunday afternoon after which the interment was made in Evergreen cemetery.

The Lessons of the Gray Days.

Life would be more of a mystery than it is but for its gray days. It is in these latter occasions that often give us the key to many problems which we have found perplexing and insensible of solution. It is in the gray days that the tropics of the occasional gray day that comes affords a wider view than when the sun's brilliancy dazzles the vision, and new beauties and new wonders are discovered that have hitherto remained unnoticed. So, too, when into our lives the gray days come and we find our brightness and our glow, when for a time the brightness is clouded and our minds and hearts find time to dwell upon the quiet spaces of eternity, we find for ourselves the answers to many questions that have puzzled us for a long time. It is not unnatural for the happy-care-free person who enjoys the brightness of life to give no thought to its more serious side. How can he be expected to do so when he has had no intimate "knowledge" of its nature? He basks in the sunshine and revels in the play-time of existence, and save for the natural sympathy with all misfortune he gives little thought to things that do not make up his own happy life. But the gray days come into all lives sooner or later. There must be shadows to soften the glare, or else we would lose our sense of proportion; there must be hardships to make us understand, or else we would not unravel, life's tangled threads. We must be sacrificed, or else we would not know how to live.

It is only those who have experienced the same sort of troubles give little thought to things that do not make up his own happy life. But the gray days come into all lives sooner or later. There must be shadows to soften the glare, or else we would lose our sense of proportion; there must be hardships to make us understand, or else we would not unravel, life's tangled threads. We must be sacrificed, or else we would not know how to live. It is only those who have experienced the same sort of troubles give little thought to things that do not make up his own happy life. We must be sacrificed, or else we would not know how to live.

are able to hold up our heads again and make the effort to begin anew, we find that the sacrifice is beneficial in more ways than one. We have learned lessons that we learned bravely, and with the mastery of one lesson to our credit, we find strength to turn to the mastery of another, and yet another, for as long as life lasts it is there will never be a lack of hard lessons to learn.

The gray days are sometimes the "self-poise" of life. They mark for many of us periods of unhappiness, of sacrifice or renunciation perhaps, but they mark at the same time the periods when we first glimpsed the better, never vision that is so essential to the development of our lives. They will stand, if we let them, for the beginning of a better appreciation of what life means, a fuller understanding of its significance and a wider conception of its duties. And as the gray days continue to throw their shadows upon the brightness of a new realization of life's true meaning comes to us. We learn through bitter trial that we cannot order our days as we would prefer to live; that happiness would serve to make us selfish even in our joy and indifferent to the sorrow of others, and that the quickest of us are so constituted that it must share, like experience before, he can understand what others have been called upon to bear. The gray days are not without their lessons, hard though these lessons may be, and he who accepts them in the right spirit goes far toward solving the better, never vision that is so essential to the development of our lives. They will stand, if we let them, for the beginning of a better appreciation of what life means, a fuller understanding of its significance and a wider conception of its duties.

Many ignorant men Pershing Says America Must Educate Citizens. Chattanooga, Feb. 19.—Gen. John J. Pershing, here for an inspection of Fort Oglethorpe, declared at a luncheon given in his honor today that he was amazed at the revelations of illiteracy shown by the men called in the selective, and emphasized the duty of Americans to support popular education and bring the benefits of good schools to every family. General Pershing said the record showed that fully 25 per cent of the men drawn in the draft were illiterate, a fact he said, which should cause every American shame, and he called upon the people to do so. He said that many of these things that we set the greatest store upon, and while the reward itself is hard to bear because our willful human nature fight so hard against the sacrifice, yet in the end, after the battle with self is over and we

Growing With The Times.

One of the hardest tasks that most of us have to perform is that of preventing ourselves from becoming narrow. This assertion will probably be resented by many persons who score the idea that they could by any possibility be narrow in their outlook upon life. But somewhere, deep down in our hearts, we all have a vague feeling that we are, after all, narrow and bound fast in certain standards of living that do not measure up to the needs of the times in which we live. We must not, however, confuse our principles with our prejudices and force ourselves into the belief that when we yield to the latter we are simply standing firmly for the former. The trouble is that we permit ourselves to continue in the old roads when new ones that give a wider view are fast springing up about us. We try to take the vision of a day that has long since past and make it meet the conditions of a new day. We refuse to see anything good in the new and remain firmly entrenched in the old regardless of the fact that we are punishing ourselves perhaps more than any other class. We have grown accustomed to certain standards of living, and we proudly, even defiantly, proclaim that we shall not adopt new standards. We are not, however, in the order of living that may develop. We must not forget, however, that a man may change his standards without the least of a reproach upon the rectitude of his principles.

It is only in this way that we can live up to the times in which we find ourselves. As pleasing as satisfying as were the conditions of our earlier years, we cannot expect that such conditions will continue throughout life. Time brings about a gradual change so gradual that we do not realize it until the first change after the years have begun to leave their ineffable marks upon our lives. In the last few years the changes have become more radical because the world has witnessed startling events the full significance of which we are only beginning to thoroughly understand. In the light of these developments we cannot refuse to accept the changes that have come into our lives and to make the best of them. That is why we cannot afford now, perhaps more than at any other period to permit ourselves to cling too fast to the standards of the old, peaceful days. There is unrest and agitation everywhere, and the end is not yet. How can we think for a moment of sitting idly by and taking no part in the changes that are passing?

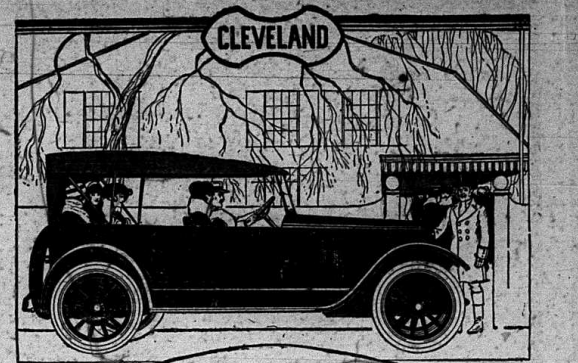

We can be content to allow ourselves to lose our hold on the outworn things that develop from day to day and to let the new things come in the place of narrowness. We must neither deliberately limit our opportunities nor block our paths. We must be broad in our vision and regard ourselves not as unimportant, insignificant factors in the great world problems but as living, breathing, vital factors. We are enough an individual to bear our share of the burden. We cannot do this by living narrow lives and burying ourselves out of sight in some pleasant nook where we will not be troubled for the time being and where we will be out of the way. Do we understand that by living such limited, selfish lives we are making a sacrifice of others and shifting our own responsibilities?

The narrow is out of place at present, and stilted, formal, limited ways of action are no longer without value. We must put ourselves to the test and, backed by the high ideals and sound principles that we have, we must be ready to present our best selves to the world as it is, throughout the years open our eyes wide to the new outlook, gathering from it all that is best and noblest and not fearing to meet its light in any of its phases. We must be true to the best of our ability. Unless we dare we shall not accomplish, and we do not know what we can do until we make the effort. The world view has broadened in the past few years as never before in a like period of time, and those of us who have not been thrown into some of the trying events that have caused the change must try to learn by observation and by that knowledge which shifts into us as we are through the experience of others something of the new viewpoint. We must make of it something that will help us through the years of action.

CLEVELAND

Owners Praise It For Its Comfort

The delightful comfort with which five adult persons ride in the Cleveland Six touring car has appealed to buyers everywhere. The wide, soft-cushion seats, upholstered in genuine hand-buffed plaited leather, are cozy as cozy can be. And the low underbody spring construction, a feature of the Cleveland Six chassis, subdues the road-shock long before it can reach the cushions.

Many unusual qualities such as these are fast winning friends for the Cleveland Six. Among light weight sixes it stands out distinctly. At all the principal automobile shows this season it has attracted extraordinary crowds. Men of mechanical interests and men experienced in the use of motor cars have been generous in their expression of approval and admiration for the entire design and construction of the Cleveland Six chassis. The several beautiful styles of body, mounted on this chassis, have met with praise from men and women alike.

When you see or drive the Cleveland Six, you want it.

Influences That Count.

The influences that most deeply affect our lives are not always those that we would have chosen. We do not realize the full influence of what has taught us that degree of wisdom necessary to forming our own opinions and drawing our own conclusions. It may be that it is just as well that we have not been able to surround ourselves with the influences we think we would prefer, because until we grow in years and ripen into maturity we would not make the wisest of choices. However that may be, it is true that we respond in a matter of fact sort of way to the influences that come most naturally into our lives, those physical powers that emanate from those in authority over us and who direct the fattening footsteps of early youth. This is an entirely proper as it is natural, and the pity of it is that we do not continue to respond to the good influences of our parents, our friends, and our teachers. Sometimes death steps in and removes forever from our mortal eyes those whom we have followed in the past and upon whose counsel we have learned to depend. But even so it is possible to permit their influence to continue with us if we are able to remain faithful to the memory of those whom we have loved and lost often exerts a restraining power over us at times when we need such restraint the most.

Apart from the natural influences of the guardian of our childhood and of those who come into our lives as we are fortunate if we are able to point with pride to the possession of friends whose influences upon us are wholly disinterested. In the friend true and tried, it is not to be despised and his influence for good will ring throughout the years of life with the clear tones of silver bells. But, for every such friend, the majority of persons can number a dozen acquaintances, or even so-called friends, whose feelings toward us are founded upon something less noble than the standard we have set, perhaps unconsciously, for our friendships. There are "fair-weather" friends whose loyalty to us will continue as long as the sun shines, but who by from storm clouds or a shelter of their own. Such influences "harm" us far more than they help us, and it often takes some unexpected shifting of the winds of our own lives to make us aware of the harm that they do. On the other hand, it is the period of adversity that brings into our lives the noble influences that we are able to point with pride to the possession of friends whose influences upon us are wholly disinterested. In the friend true and tried, it is not to be despised and his influence for good will ring throughout the years of life with the clear tones of silver bells. But, for every such friend, the majority of persons can number a dozen acquaintances, or even so-called friends, whose feelings toward us are founded upon something less noble than the standard we have set, perhaps unconsciously, for our friendships.

THE TEETH AND THEIR CARE.

Neglect of the teeth is one of the commonest causes of general weakness and lowered body resistance. Good health is impossible without sound teeth. Decayed teeth are the dangerous cause of the symptoms known as indigestion, with its attendant headaches and nervousness. Toothache is painful and disagreeable, but it is not the worst punishment following neglect of the teeth. Decay produces pus and vile poisonous matter which causes rheumatism, heart trouble, and other disorders which cause disease in almost every part of the body.

The principal disease of the teeth are decay, tartar, and pyorrhea or "bleeding" disease. Tartar is caused by neglect. Particles of food allowed to remain on or between the teeth ferment and produce the tartar which attacks the tissues surrounding the teeth. Pyorrhea is an enamel and pulp disease. "Tartar" is a deposit which forms around

STOMACH TROUBLE

Mr. Marion Holcomb of Nancy, Ky., says: "For quite a long while I suffered with stomach trouble. I would have pains and a heavy feeling after my meals, a most disagreeable taste in my mouth. If I ate anything with butter, oil or grease, I would spit it up. I began to have regular sick headaches. I had used pills and tablets, but after a course of these, my condition had not seemed to stir my stomach all up. I found they were no good at all for my trouble. I heard recommended very highly, so began to use it. It cured me. I keep it in the house all the time. It is the best liver medicine made. I do not have sick headaches or stomach trouble any more." Black-Draught acts on the laded liver and helps it to do its important work of throwing out the poisonous poisons from the system. This medicine should be in every household just in-time-of-need. Trophy of Yacht Race.

Pensacola, Fla., Feb. 22.—It was announced here tonight that Sir Thomas Lipton has offered a trophy for the winner of a series of trophy races in which representatives of the four gulf yacht clubs are entered. The race will be sailed in five class boats and will probably take place in July next.

the lack of the teeth at the edge of the gums. It is a lime-like substance from the saliva which becomes mixed with food particles, as these deposits increase in size they cause the gums to become swollen, sore, and bleeding; produce "black breath"; and later cause the gums to recede, thus exposing the more delicate portions of the teeth. If tartar is allowed to remain on the teeth, pus pockets and abscesses will form and finally kill the teeth. Pyorrhea is a loathsome and persistent disease of the sockets of the teeth and often leads to their loss. The causes are tartar, constipation, overwork, eating hot, soft food and general uncleanliness of the mouth and teeth. Successful treatment of these three diseases can only be given by a dentist.

Right now is the best time of the year to visit the dentist and have the teeth put in shape, and to begin the habit of keeping them clean. Nothing gives a more increased feeling of well-being and refinement than a clean set of teeth, and if you will go to the dentist and let your family with you you will better enjoy life.
