BAIL AND PAROLE

"Ah, but a man's reach should exceed his grasp," said Robert Browning. However, far short we may have of attaining our aspirations. The students of the Johnsonian have endeavored to support the highest aims of the College, its heritage, and its worth to all individuals connected with it. And now, for the first time, we wish to learn this truism of Browning's. We know that in her hands the direction of the paper will be in the capable hands of a member of the staff that she also has a larger vision of the paper's future, a view "behind the curtain".

In attempting to argue to myself that one who has this year, probably more than any other, shown her interest and belief in the future of College and the desire of the student body to be heard, the words become chaste in contrast with the intrinsically valuable work that has been put on paper in the past by the ever-present, self-sacrificing, and consistent efforts on behalf of the paper, our group would have been futile. We are truly thankful for her.

Perhaps we may have to take a second thought under the year by year.

Unraveling thoroughly all the titles and changes of exchange, each member of this group of the class, with an ever-present, self-sacrificing, and consistent efforts on behalf of the paper, our group would have been futile. We are truly thankful for her.
