I believe that God made us to work. I believe that he meant we should earn our living by the sweat of our brow. But I believe that He made us to love our work so much that we might play at it; find real and profound pleasure in it; and so labor on until, tired out, we might sleep like little children at the end of each day.

TUESDAY, APRIL 10.

One often hears of men buying orange groves and retreating to grove them, notwithstanding the fact that groves with years of experience tell them that to successfully grow oranges the trees must be sprayed. The fellow who refuses to take advice goes ahead, and in the end makes a complete failure and finds that he is unable to sell that spotted oranges he is able to produce.

Many farmers in the cotton belt are applying the same methods to raising cotton under bell weevil conditions. They refuse to use calcium arsenate but no doubt after a few years of unsuccessal cotton raising they will come around and begin using the poison.

That there will be a scarcity of calcium arsenate this year seems to be an assured fact. The New would advise its readers who are engaged in raising cotton to prepare themselves against a possible shortage. One can secure calcium arsenate at the present time and should do so without further delay. To our mind it has been clearly demonstrated that to successfully raise cotton under bell weevil conditions it is best to use poison as well as an unlimited amount of real hard work.

On last Saturday night prohibition agents were on the highway between Greenville and Abbeville watching for an automobile, which was reported would travel that way loaded with whiskey. Two young women came along in a car and the officers attempted to stop them, thinking it was possibly the car containing the whiskey. The young women became excited, which was perfectly natural, and speeded up the car. According to the prohibition agents this led them to firmly

With a full and frank exchange of views," said Senator Jones, "mutual concessions can and will be made," and success assured. CALCIUM ARSENATE We have just received a car load of Calcium Arsenate. This Arsenate was manufactured by Riches-Piver & Co., of New York, who made the first Calcium Arsenate the government used in their experiment station in Louisiana. Therefore, it's the best.

For the next 30 days we will sell this Arsenate at 18 cents in order to make room.

We are reliably informed that Calcium Arsenate is very scarce, and we think it would be very wise to secure your Calcium Arsenate now. We were fortunate in getting this early, otherwise we could not begin to sell this Arsenate at this price.

Cotton is too high to take chances in not poisoning and you cannot make it without the use of Calcium Arsenate, and when you buy it, you want to be sure you get the best.

runner off car was that of summing bills and they passed around at the car as it sped down the road. Three bullets struck the car, one of which penetrated the rear tire causing the young woman to come to a stop. The prohibition agents advanced and upon seeing that the car contained two young women they offered their apologies.

Major George Bowen, federal prohibition director for South Carolina, has been asked to investigate the matter and states that it was "an unfortunate mistake," but that he is of the opinion that in the circumstances the agents can not be blamed. It is further stated that it was dark at the time the car came along and that the prohibition officers could not see that the car contained young women. And no doubt, on account of the darkness the young women could not see that their billiard officers.

They were being asked to stop by prohibition officers at automobiles by prohibition officers. The matter of promiscuously stopping officers is getting entirely too common and the people, even those who are staunch prohibitionists, are not in sympathy with the practice. It is generally known that the prohibition officers have a hard time enforcing the prohibition laws, but it would be better to let a few runners get by that to have a recent citizen shot down on the highways by so-called representatives of the government. And too, these officers have no representative that every car which does not come to a stand still on a signal contains whiskey. Exceedingly few people care to take a chance at night by stopping their cars upon signals.

Major Bowen's office was engaged in raising cotton to prepare themselves against a possible shortage. One can secure calcium arsenate at the present time and should do so without further delay. To our mind it has been clearly demonstrated that to successfully raise cotton under bell weevil conditions it is best to use poison as well as an unlimited amount of real hard work.

FIND JOHN BARFIELD WITH ARM BADLY CUT

Alleged Slayer of Federal Probation Officer Found in Pasture Near Bethune. Weak From Loss of Blood From Severe Cut.

Hartsville, April 8.—John Barfield, the man who is alleged to have shot and killed J. L. Youmans, federal probation officer near Hartsville early last Tuesday morning, was captured by Sheriff E. W. Kerhaw county near Bethune. He was lying in a pasture on a place called Barber's farm, with a wound below the elbow. He claimed the wound was caused by striking a barbed wire fence while running. This was given no credence by doctors who stated it was a knife cut and opinion is that he tried to commit suicide.

Barfield had lain in the pasture since Friday night and was in a very weak condition when he was brought to Bethune.

He was carried to Bethune and there lodged in the guardhouse. Members of the Bethune town council to await the arrival of Sheriff E. W. Register of this county, who will bring him immediately following the capture.

Barfield, admitted to Sheriff Register, it is said, that he fired one shot killing a fire bird by some one else.

The arrest of Barfield brings the number of arrests that far to a total of eight, five white and three negroes.

AN INSPIRATIONAL LIFE.

To be practically helping in body but to have one of the biggest and strongest brains in the country is an unusual combination—literally it is a sound mind in an unusual body—but that is the fortune of Charles Lee Cook, of Louisville, Ky., and by means of his brain he has made himself known all over the world, while his helpless body keeps him confined to a rolling chair. This man has never been able to walk with his hands cannot be lifted above his head; his body serves him no purpose in the world save to house his wonderful brain and to keep it nourished in a purely physical sense.

The life of Charles Lee Cook should give inspiration to every one, especially to those who may in some way be laboring under a physical handicap.

Cook not long since received an annual salary of forty thousand dollars the year. He prefers to manage his own enterprises which he has built up to the point where he receives a magnificent income from them alone and certain inventions of his bring in handsome royalties.

He lives in Louisville, Ky., but he designed and built what is said to be the largest crane in the world down at Brunswick, Ga. He is ranked as the intimate associate of brilliant lawyers, engineers, artists, architects, engineers and statesmen of this country. His friends claim that he is the only private citizen of the United States who has ever been given the privilege of the floor of the United States Senate—this we have not investigated and cannot vouch for—or who has ever had a speech printed in the Congressional Record.

To look at his helpless body one would at first have only profound pity for one in such a condition. An enormous head, and you realize that you are in the presence of a massive intellect, that you are in the presence of a master mind. And yet there is a mind that seems to be the ordinary individual that his physical helplessness would have been that much more gallant to him, that he would have thought it a disgrace to die early in life. But Charles Lee Cook was not made that way.

The remark was once made in Mr. Cook's hearing that if the speaker had been so helplessly crippled he would long ago have committed suicide. Mr. Cook remarked quietly that, crippled as he was, if he never made more of himself than the average man, with his body he would have been cheerfully willing to commit suicide.

A boy of 11, he worked at a lathe in the corner of his father's workshop, twelve, fifteen, seventeen hours a day, perfecting his first invention, but again his intelligence made more of himself than the average man, with his body he would have been cheerfully willing to commit suicide.

When he was 12 years old he built a miniature of the famous Mississippi river towboat, Ajax. This model was twelve inches long and ran by steam. Then he built a steam engine only eight inches high which could throw a jet of water fifty feet, and expert engineers and mechanics agreed that the workmanship equaled the finest Swiss watch. Still he received no particular encouragement from his family.

One day he was washing a railroad cut being excavated, and he noticed that steam escaped from the steam chest of the engine. It was an obvious waste of power. He decided to change that. And he did it. He got his packing on the engine himself one night when the watchmen had gone. It worked so successfully that his audience sometimes laughed. Unspeakingly humiliated, he asked a teacher friend why he laughed, and was told that he was because of his inadequate knowledge of English, a lack attributed to the fact that he had not attended school beyond his seventh year. But immediately he set himself to an intensive study of English, of grammar and rhetoric and the science of human speech in general.

Today his knowledge of the classics is amazing. His study of the Greek and Sanscrit roots has brought an adequate knowledge of each language.

Nor does his ability stay there. From his interest in engineering, architecture and designing he became interested in art. He is soon to publish a book of lectures on art.

When you feel that your physical handicaps are too hard for you to bear, think of Charles Lee Cook. Cook is a genius, you will say, and it has to be admitted. Still with the brain of a genius he has a body that would drive most men and women to desperation. It has served to spur him to greater endeavor.

The Chester Chamber of Commerce, who recently took up the matter of the discontinuance of the Star route to Blenheimville and Fort Lawn, has heard from Senator Dial and Congressman Stevenson about the matter, both of whom have taken the discontinuance of the route up with the postal department. It is hoped that it will be seen fit to re-establish this route as the discontinuance has caused the people of Blenheimville and Fort Lawn sections much trouble about their mail. The Chamber of Commerce is to be commended for its action in this matter which is of much importance to the people on the route.

"I will build a car for the multitude"

Said Henry Ford in 1903—Read how the fulfillment of that prophecy is now made possible through the

Ford Weekly Purchase Plan

For many years it has been Henry Ford's personal ambition to make the Ford the universal family car—to put it within the reach of the millions of people who have never been privileged to enjoy the benefits of motor car ownership.

During the past fifteen years over 7,500,000 Ford cars have been placed in the hands of retail customers—more than a million and a half of them within the past twelve months—and yet there are still millions of families who are hopefully looking forward to the day when they can own a Ford.

And now the way is open.

Under the terms of this plan you can select your Ford Car, set aside a small amount each week and you will be surprised how soon you will own it. In the meantime your money will be safely deposited to your credit in one of the local banks where it will draw interest.

Think it over. Five Dollars will start an account. The whole family can participate in it—father, mother, brothers and sisters each doing a little.

Why not start today. Stop in and talk it over with your local Ford dealer. He will be glad to fully explain the details of the plan and help you get started toward the ownership of a Ford car.

Nationality in Nerves.

By H. Addington Bruce.
Commenting on the alleged fact that Americans suffer from functional nervous troubles, are, on the whole, less responsive than French or English psycho-neurotics to treatment by self-suggestion, Anna Starbuck Duryea, in her recently published book, "American Nerves and the Secret of Suggestion," offers an interesting explanation. The varying responsiveness she would attribute to differences in the psychic make-up of American, French and English people. These differences in their turn she attributes largely to climatic influences. If one would profit from self suggestion one must have, so to speak, a facility for picturing vividly to one's self the ideal suggested, or an ability to accept them unreservedly. The French, as Mrs. Duryea sees it, are exceptionally gifted in the former respect. The English, on the other hand, while less emotional and imaginative than the French, possess a power of acquiescence in relaxation which enables them likewise to profit from self-suggestion. "The response of the English, on his sea girl's side," writes Mrs. Duryea, "surrounded by his relaxing fogs, which soothe his nerves to a degree of self-forgetfulness, is probably of a different nature from that of one's compatriot. It would naturally be the result of an ability for unself-conscious acquiescence rather than through the response of imagination to emotional stimulus." Americans, on the contrary, must be regarded as deficient in imaginative as compared with the French, and in power of relaxation as compared with the English. Hence treatment by self-suggestion finds the "Cone or any other system of treatment by self-suggestion finds them less responsive. Again, to elaborate in Mrs. Duryea's words: "Our least nerves and our practical common sense point of view seems to be under given conditions of immense value for certain uses, but unfortunately they do not provide just the conditions needed for appropriating health through the emotional response."

"The sort of self-consciousness to which we as a nation frankly plead guilty, a probable result of our comparatively dry and very variable climate, renders American nerves sometimes exceedingly uncomfortable and often unmanageable instruments, and easily induces that national disease which got itself christened Amareticosis. Once with its clutches we find it difficult to control the degree of our suggestion."

"Our practical minds are not endowed with imaginative power which equals the ability of our intelligence to grasp an explanation. Therefore it is natural that neither in the entire chestnut of the last week French spirit of emotionalism nor in the child-spirit of voluntary relaxation could American nerves easily adapt themselves to the appeal of our method."
All this, as stated, is exceedingly interesting. But, conceding that there actually is a difference in nationality in nerves, is for one so reluctant to accept the climatic theory as adequately explaining the difference noted?
To accept it would mean a fatalistic foredoom of the inhabitants of certain climates, to be merely deficient in response to that invaluable therapeutic aid, self-suggestion, but also exceptionally subject to those functional nervous ailments for which self-suggestion is peculiarly helpful.
It is now well established that functional nervous troubles are essentially functional mental troubles and are produced, not so much by defects in the nervous constitution as by faulty mental habits, the source of which is faulty training leading to faulty life attitudes. This, clearly, it is possible to correct, as would not be the case were functional health and health wholly or chiefly dependent on climate.

Consequently, if, as Mrs. Duryea suggests, and as facts of daily observation bear out, Americans have over-developed the practical sense at the expense of the imaginative, and if it is their habit to be unduly tense, the implication is that certain changes should result, not merely increased ability to profit from self-suggestion, but an appreciable lessening of the malady of Americans, designated by Mrs. Duryea as the national disease.

SCATTERING ASHES

There is a fashionable undertaker in New York City now planning to scatter the ashes of dead customers as desired to be cremated, over the ocean by airplane. It's an up-to-date scheme.
If, in a few years, we discover a means of reaching Mars, this undertaker will probably advertise that, for a small payment, he will plant your ashes upon that planet.

It seems inconceivable that a healthy mind, conscious of the myriad attractions and opportunities and duties of life, should waste so much thought upon the disposition of the human clay. Yet it is a fact and a reflection upon human consistency and intelligence.
Late, at best, is short enough. Why waste its precious moments upon elaborate preparations for its end? The explanation is a simple one. It is but vanity struggling to maintain its own; the person who carefully plans his own mausoleum, or inspects the designs for his grave-stones or leaves careful instructions for the disposal of the body, is invariably vain and desires to cling to his vanity even after life has departed.

It is an unhealthy thought and an unhealthy preparation. A great portion of the tremendous amount of money spent upon funerals would do a lot of good among the living. The object of life is to improve and beautify life. Not to make death a spectacular exit.

To speculate upon the end of life for the purpose of taking count of the passing moments is laudable. To plan for a beautiful or picturesque funeral is meritorious and deplorable.
Live as happily and as tranquilly as you can. Think of death only as the end of your exertions, in order that you may direct those exertions the more intelligently. Do not be afraid of it. Above all, do not worry about it. And, whether you believe in a hereafter or not, do not commit the idioty of giving detailed instructions for your burial. The very thought of it will interfere with your sane enjoyment of life.

The worst that can happen to your remains is that they will be buried in the earth, will, ultimately, mingle with and enrich the soil and will help to nourish the beautiful grass and flowers that peep forth toward the sun when spring arrives.
That's the worst. And, as far as you can see, the best.
