Candidates visit campus; discuss views

Three “front runner” candidates for the post of Winthrop College President were on campus from Jan. 28-Feb. 4 to meet with administration, faculty, and student body members.

The three candidates—B.G. Stephens, Oscar C. Page, and Martha Piper—were selected from more than 300 applicants for the post vacated by Phil Lader in December. All have at least some ties to South Carolina, and all have experience in college administration.

The first candidate to meet with college representatives was Dr. B.G. Stephens, president of MacMurray College in Jacksonville, Ill., and former dean of the college and vice president for academic affairs at Wofford College in Spartanburg.

Stephens has been president of MacMurray College since 1980. Stephens holds a Ph.D. in chemistry from Clemson University; his undergraduate degree, also in chemistry, was received at Wofford in 1957.

Stephens taught chemistry at Wofford from 1965 until 1980, when he accepted the presidency of MacMurray. He also served as dean of the college at Wofford from 1974 until his departure.

During his tenure at MacMurray, he has acquired a reputation for being weak on minority recruitment and for not always being open with students, according to Scott Greenwood, editor of The Daily Other, MacMurray’s student newspaper.

“There doesn’t seem to be much of an effort to recruit minorities here; there’s not nearly a fair distribution,” Greenwood said. “It’s not nearly as good as it could be—we’re basically a college of upper-middle class white kids... though the soccer team is over half Mexican.”

“He’s easy to talk about things, but he’s hard to approach if you ask him about serious matters such as long-range proposals for the college, or about college investments,” Greenwood said.

“They’re raising our fees again, and he’s extremely vague if you press him about where the money is going,” Greenwood continued, “He’ll really give you the runaround.”

MacMurray College is a private Methodist college with approximately 850 students.

The second candidate to visit the Winthrop campus was Dr. Oscar C. Page, vice president for academic affairs at Lander College.

Page, who earned his doctorate in Early Modern European History at the University of Kentucky, has also studied at Western Kentucky University in Bowling Green.

Page served as president of Lander during the 1985 semester. He was appointed to the position by the State College Board of Trustees during President Larry A. Jackson’s leave to study at Cambridge University.

Bruce Ferrell, editor of The Forum, Lander’s student newspaper, seemed pleased with the job Page has done at Lander.

“He’s always been more than ready to talk to students,” Ferrell said. Dr. Page takes a very keen interest in the student body.

According to Ferrell, Lander has met the desegregation goals set by the state and federal government for total black enrollment, enrollment of black freshmen, and black faculty members.

Lander, a school of approximately 2,300 students, is 20.5 percent black; a figure which exceeds the goal of 16.1 percent.

The total black freshman enrollment is 20.6 percent, exceeding the target range of 22.25 percent. Lander has a total black faculty enrollment above the established goal of 5.3 percent.

Six persons make up the Presidential Search Committee, which will eventually designate one of 300 applicants for the presidency of Winthrop College, and send that nomination to the Board of Trustees for their approval.

Candidates

According to Ferrell, Page performs his job very well and has a good rapport with the student body.

Page said that Page is a very capable administrator. She said of his short term as president, "He did a great job. Every problem that came up he handled very well."

According to Aull, students have a suggestion box which they can fill with complaints about everything from faculty members to cafeteria food.

"We can go to various administrators including Dr. Page and talk to them about the faculty," Aull said.

Student body president Mickey Rogers agrees that Page is an able and easily accessible administrator. Rogers said that "There is no doubt" in her mind that Page could successfully serve as president of Winthrop College.

The third candidate was Dr. Martha Kime Piper, chancellor at the University of Houston at Victoria.

Piper earned her undergraduate degree in 1960 from Elmhurst College in Illinois, where she majored in political science and history. She completed her master's degree at the University of Kansas and received her doctorate from the University of Texas at Austin. Piper has held various positions in higher education including special assistant to the president for academic affairs with the University of Houston system, chair of faculty senate, director of academic affairs, and chair of the science education program at the University of Houston at University Park. She also served as coordinator for the professional teacher preparation program at the University.

Marci Carter, editor of the CH-Voice, the student newspaper of the University of Houston at Victoria and SGA president, described Piper as "a fine lady."

"She is very easy to work with. She has the students' interests at heart and puts them first."

According to Carter, the college has very few minority students enrolled.

"However, Chancellor Piper was thinking about leaving. She'll be very hard to replace. The students like her very much. You can walk in her office without an appointment and even if she has two minutes, she'll listen," Carter said.

"I didn't know Chancellor Piper was thinking about leaving," Page said.

"It's a big thing there. The chamber of commerce also gets involved," Carter said.

"There are others waiting in the wings."

According to Smith, the Search Committee is meeting to discuss an undisclosed location to interview candidates for the campus. A decision to either nominate one of the three, or invite additional candidates to campus, could be made at the meeting today, Smith said.

The Search Committee has additional top candidates, citing a need for confidentiality. However, the names of the three candidates brought in were released to the public on Jan. 31.

The insistence for secrecy, even after the candidates arrived on campus, has been questioned by Search Committee members.

"We may have been remiss in our duties by not publicizing the names and resumes of the three candidates before they arrived on campus," said Dr. Gerald Perselay, professor of business faculty representative to the board of trustees and a search committee member. "I will recommend that the names of any other candidates brought to campus be published prior to their arrival."

Smith also said the names should have been released on the day of the first candidate's arrival by mid-January.

Senate postponed, lacks quorum

By R.W. GODFREY
TJ staff writer

Last week's session was postponed by Senate President Bryan Grant when it became evident that there would not be enough senators attending to form a quorum.

Grant waited until 8:15 before deciding to postpone. The decision marked the first time this year senate failed to have enough members on hand to form a legal majority.

Senate was shy by only a few members necessary for a quorum and the cultural event scheduled for the same evening is believed to be responsible for the majority of absences.

Legislation allowing the Shack to remain open until 1 a.m. Sunday-Thursday and until 2 a.m. Friday and Saturday was approved and returned by Dean Tom Webb who appeared before the attending senators to discuss the implications and responsibilities associated with the bill.

Webb expressed concern about people becoming too intoxicated or loud due to the new hours and also stated concerns about legal liabilities associated with drunk driving.

"In review I see no reason why not to go (with the legislation)," Webb said. The legislation was approved with the understanding of this body that we have to continue to be good neighbors due to the people who live in close proximity of the Shack," the senators, reminding them that if the legislation "creates problems for both of us the hours will revert back to the original hours."

New legislation that was scheduled for last week that will be introduced at the next session include a resolution written by Phelps Senator Linda Gaetan to have the Rules and Regulations Committee research why professor evaluations are not made public for viewing by students as they once were several years ago.

A recommendation was submitted by Wofford Senator Susan Coltrane to have the Winthrop College Senate research why the Winthrop College Post Office does not forward mail to the students over Christmas break.

Another recommendation was submitted by Freshman Class Vice-President Tom Robertson that the Winthrop College lacrosse teams establish longer hours on weekends.

Senator meets Tuesday nights at 8 p.m. in the Dinkins Auditorium and is open to the public.

Stern wows Winthrop

By KAREN PARKER

It all began 14 months ago, when the Fine Arts Series decided to invite Isaac Stern to Winthrop College.

Stern was an extraordinarily big name acts in the future. "Beechdub has helped us a lot to get out and meet people. They do a great job," Webb said. "DSU was lucky to get this show. While we were working on last month's Producers concert, we heard from Beechdub promotions that The Scorchers tour was picking up dates rapidly. We were a little hesitant at first, but when we heard the reviews and saw the low cost, we realized this was it."

"Beechdub has helped us a lot on this show," Wannamaker said. "They do a great deal of promoting in this area, and, if this show works, we hope to do a lot more work with Beechdub in the future."

"For the time being," he continued, "we're trying to do more with Beechdub in the future."

Tickets for Jason and the Scorchers go on sale at 7 p.m. the evening of the show.

Letters to the editor

Dear Editor,

I'm writing in reference to your lack of publicity for minority events on Winthrop's campus.

On Nov. 7, 1985, Lerone Bennett, Jr., senior editor of Ebony magazine, came to speak at Winthrop. Prior to his arrival, the story on Mr. Bennett was set on the next to last page of The Johnsonian as a Public Information Office (PIO) press release. However, when I spoke with an economist who also spoke at Winthrop on the same night as Mr. Bennett was on the front page with a picture.

It's bad enough that we used to have to take a back seat on the bus; now we're stuck in the junk in the back of the newspaper without a decent cover story. It's bad enough that we used to have to take a back seat on the bus; now we're stuck in the junk in the back of the newspaper without a decent cover story.

As good journalists would, we decided the invitations in order to seek out another source. We found it.

In fact, we had gotten the names of the first two candidates, had contacted their home institutions, and were on the verge of getting the name of the third candidate when the Search Committee suddenly reversed itself and released all resumes to the public on the afternoon of Jan. 20.

Why the sudden change of heart?

Mary Sue McElveen, Chairman of the Board of Trustees and a member of the Search Committee, said simply, "It was time."

She refused to elaborate, even several days later, perhaps it was suddenly "time" because the names were being spread like wildfire across the campus and any further pretentions to secrecy would have been silly and in vain.

It does seem odd, though, that the Search Committee would change its mind after being so adamant for so long that such a release would compromise the selection process. It looks now as if that excuse was just "made up" and was spurious all along.

Thirteen students attended the three breakfasts, drawn, according to Brett Smith, from a representative cross section of the Winthrop student body.

"Let's take a closer look at this cross section."

Although 67 percent of the students at Winthrop are women, only four women were represented on the student panel.

Although only 10 percent of the students at Winthrop are "Greek", nine out of 13 on the panel were fraternity or sorority members.

Although 29 percent of the students here are freshmen (and therefore have an enormous stake in the final decision, only two freshmen were on the panel. Although the vast majority of us are not student officers, six of the panelists were.

Only minorities were selected to more proportionally represent the panel, with two blacks present.

This was the "representative" cross section that was supposed to be the sole student input into the last stages of the presidential selection process.

Convening the student panel was an excellent and progressive idea, but the representation could have been wider and more proportional.

Now, of course, the names and backgrounds of the three candidates have been published in this paper, so all students can know the facts, comment upon them, and truly influence if we dare--the final selection.

But the gatekeeping by the Search Committee and the Board of Trustees is not over.

Today, at noon, at a location Brett Smith, Mary Sue McElveen, and F. Merritt Wilkerson refused to divulge (no reason given for not divulging) national security, likely.

The Presidential Search Committee is meeting in closed session to decide whether or not they want to choose any of the three candidates brought to campus for Smith put it, "There are others waiting in the wings."

It is quite possible, if the committee is still unsure of itself, that the committee will suddenly change its mind after being so adamant for so long that such a release would compromise the selection process.

As I said two weeks ago, the Search Committee and the Board should level with us.

It is still the duty of the Search Committee to tell us who these 'others' are, but if their past practice and present behavior is any indication, it will be left up to the students to find out the best way they can.

We'll keep you informed. If they let us.

Safety measures taken

By LISA BUIE

TJ editor

The brothers of Omega Psi Phi Fraternity definitely deserve to be thanked by Winthrop women.

The fraternity, which will offer escort services to female students walking alone after dark, has been the first in taking responsibility for fellow students. We congratulate this group for recognizing the need for such a service.

Due to the incidents of violence and assaults last semester, an escort service is a very essential and timely project to undertake.

We were victimized. The Johnsonian received letters from students claiming that they didn't like walking alone but had no choice. A call for action on the part of campus organizations was made to alleviate this serious problem.

Omega Psi Phi has been the only group to respond. Why haven't any other groups taken the incidents as the serious but avoidable tragedies that they are?

We agree with the Omegas in hoping that other organizations will follow this example. We also encourage female students to utilize this service rather than take dangerous safety risks.

Student safety is an issue of utmost concern, and all organizations seem to agree. We commend Omega Psi Phi for doing something about it.

Who else is next?

Two weeks ago in this column, I asked "Who's Next?", and stated the Presidential Search Committee has a duty to inform the students, staff, and faculty about who is seriously being considered for the post of Winthrop College President.

What has happened since then has been enlightening.

The day after the column was published, TJ Editor Lisa Buie and I received an invitation to a series of breakfasts with three of the candidates, but were told by SGA President Brett Smith that the names and current status of the three, as well as the topics of discussion at the breakfasts, were to be kept off the record. That Buie and I would be ethically barred from printing the information, even if we later acquired it from another source, if we chose to attend the breakfasts.

As all good journalists would, we declined the invitations in order to seek out another source.

Racial tensions simmer and flare

(CPS)-When University of Pennsylvania students returned to campus a few weeks ago, Legal Studies Lecturer Murray Dolfman wasn't there.

No one knows why Dolfman, whose presence has exacerbated racial tensions on the campus since he allegedly referred to black students as ex-slaves and made other questionable remarks in his class in 1984, didn't show.

But even in his absence, students report "a huge amount of racial tension, a real lack of faith in the administration," and a feeling that "the administration will react to a crisis, but they won't prevent one."

Penn isn't alone.

Minority students at a startling number of campuses have complained, almost in unison, of escalating racial tensions in the last three months.

And in almost all cases, they claim administrators are less sensitive to their feelings of isolation.

Observers think it's because the Reagan administration no longer forces large institutions to push to hire and recruit minorities, or to continue to integrate their campuses actively.

"People at schools who do affirmative action were a nuisance use Reagan's lead to support their in not doing anything," says Robert Ethridge, affirmative action officer at Emory University in Atlanta and president of the American Association of Affirmative Action Administrators.

"And the president sets the tone on campus. Why should lower-level administrators care if he doesn't?" Ethridge asks.

Ethridge reports "more than just a few incidents" of college presidents demoting affirmative action officers. For example, officers who once reported directly to the campus president now find their desks moved to more remote offices, and their once-direct lines to the president are now intercepted by two or three medium-level administrators.

"All of this indicates to the campus that the affirmative action officer no longer has clout, that black concerns are no longer important," Ethridge says.

"It means you don't have the influence you once did, so lower level administrators say, 'we don't have to try, either,'" Ethridge says.

Administrators still haven't responded, for instance, to University of Alabama student Vice President John Merrill's disturbing survey finding showing U.A. students still have "real racist feelings."

"They'll listen to it, but won't act on it until the turn of the century," Merrill says.

The administration won't do anything against alums, anyway.

"And it'd be fine with them if blacks didn't even go to school here," Merrill adds.

Frustrations with perceived administrative footdragging are near the boiling point at Texas, too, reports UT Black Student Alliance President Kevin Williams.

"Black students, only three percent of the Austin campus' enrollment, daily feel isolated," Williams says, as they walk by "four or five buildings named after Klansman, a statue of Jefferson Davis, and another building named after a former UT president who said he'd never admit a black to this school."

Less episodically, black students were angered by two recent cases of "very well-known racial discrimination" by the UT police.

But the police refused four of five times to meet with the BSA to discuss the incidents, and, when the BSA appealed to it for help, the administration "didn't respond."

Now black students, also upset by a silent administration response to a minority recruitment proposal, are "either leaving or getting fed up," UT counselors report.

Nationwide, feelings of "having second-class status" are becoming more prevalent, says Jacqueline Fleming, a Barnard psychology professor and author of "Blacks in College."

She says official inattention makes them feel "abandoned."

West Virginia black students responded by instigating a street fight, says Fredericka Wallace, president of the Black Unity Organization.

She says racial tensions have been building since August, but blacks felt they "could not go to authorities because we'd be laughed at."

At Connecticut, Puerto Ricans demanded an apology.

Student aid cut

(CPS)-Congress' new budget-balancing bill, passed in December, could mean student aid could mean decreases of anywhere from two to 60 percent in all student aid programs.

The new law, usually called the Gramm-Rudman law after senators Philip Gramm (R-Tex) and Warren Rudman (R-N.H), who co-sponsored it, forces the federal government to balance its budget by 1991.

But in doing so, Congress is not allowed to cut spending for Social Security, some welfare programs, many defense programs or to pay off the federal debt.

So, unless the government tries to help balance the budget by raising some taxes, education programs will be temting fiscal tax hikes, lobbyists say.

Just how deep the first round of cuts will be is open to debate.

By calculating current Gramm-Rudman targets and the escalating deficit, Susan Frost of the U.S. Dept. of Education will have to share all its college program funding by 4.6 percent in March and another 30 percent in October.

Lobbyists are reluctant to specify just how many students would be forced out of school by the cuts, or to estimate how much schools would have to raise tuition to compensate for them.

They do, however, think the cuts will hurt badly.

"Consequences of Gramm-Rudman's possible 40 to 60 percent (cuts in higher education next fall) will be absolutely disastrous to millions of current and future students," observes Kathy Ozer, legislative director of the U.S. Student Association (USSA).

The same pressure to reduce spending could also force Congress to reduce college program funding in the upcoming Higher Education Act of 1986, which sets spending levels through 1990, adds Pat Smith, legislative analyst for the American Council on Education (ACE).

Under the new law, Osprez estimates Congress will have to trim about $11.7 billion from the 1986 fiscal year budget by March.

If it doesn't, President Reagan would "resequester" funds, deciding by himself which programs not to fund in order to save money.

Based on what he's done before possible tax legislation,ACE's Smith, moreover, doesn't think states readily will replace federal student aid cuts with funds of their own.

"We haven't heard of any quantum leaps in state aid," Smith says. "It tends to go up with inflation, and that's it."

Lobbyists have not surrendered, though.

ACE and the USSR will be organizing a letter campaign around the county for students to write their representatives. The target time will be around St. Patrick's Day, when legislators will be making key decisions.

"We will be working the green back in the education budget," Ozer says.

A similar nationwide letter-writing campaign helped defeat the Reagan proposal to cut federal student aid programs in 1982.
Homecoming this week

Has spring sprung or what? Could it possibly have seven more weeks of winter left? (And not one snowflake, yet!!!) All of our teams seem to be enjoying practicing in the fresh air and sunshine. The tennis team is shaping up for their first matches and are looking great. They seem to be playing alot more aggressive this year than in the past.

Congratulations to women's basketball players Janet Dykton and Stephanie Morris. These two seniors have been nominated for the Kodak All-American team in the NCAA Division II. Dykton is leading Winthrop's scoring attack this season over the first fourteen games of the year. She averages 17.7 points game. She also leads the team in assists with 59. She is pulling 4.5 rebounds per contest.

Morris is scoring 13.8 points per game which is the second highest on the team. In addition, she has 9.5 rebounds per contest and is third on the team in assists with 22. That's a fantastic record and quite an honor for these ladies! Again, congratulations, ladies and best of luck to you.

Speaking of women's basketball the record is now 9-6 with the last four games being victories. All of the women are playing well. Third and fourth in scoring are Debbie Easterling and Mary Susan Austin with 12.1 and 7.7 points, respectively, for each outing. Way to hustie ladies!

The men's baseball team has been tabbed by the coaches and SID's in the Big South Conference to finish third in the 1986 conference race. The men, who won the inaugural league championship a year ago, finished behind Campbell and Coastal Carolina in the overall voting. Winthrop, finished 47-9-1, and received one first place vote and 101 points.

Hey, I think the men may do a lot better than that.

The Winthrop Eagles men's basketball team won their first-ever Division I road game two weeks ago against Radford with a 65-60 final score. This is the second NCAA Division I victory ever! (The first win was against Campbell.)

Fred McKinnon is now tenth in the NCAA Division II scoring race. The senior forward is scoring 21.9 points per game through the first 21 games of the season. McKinnon continues to lead the Big South in scoring. The men are currently third in the NCAA Division II in field goal percentage. Winthrop has made 664 of 1243 field goals for a percentage of .534 percent. That makes the Eagles the top club in the Big South in this category.

Senior forward Allen Washington is the Big South's rebounding and field goal percentage leader. He is averaging 15.5 rebounds per outing and hitting 57 percent from the field. In the first 21 games he has recovered 200 offensive shots and hit on 130 of 229 goal attempts. Wow! Way to go guys! Keep up the good work.

And, where IS the golf team? Someone please get in touch with me for a feature and some pictures! We want to know you guys!

Homecoming is this week! So don't forget. The Homecoming representatives will be announced during the women's basketball game against Appalachian State at 5:00 during half-time. Remember these dates! Today at 2:00 work may begin on the Homecoming Exhibits in front of Byrnes. Voting will be all day today through Wednesday for Homecoming Court. Float work will continue through the week. On Saturday the exhibits will be judged at noon. On Wednesday at 5:00 banners are due at the Coliseum. Thursday night at 8:00 is Homecoming Rally which will be followed by a pep rally. At 9:30 there will be a concert in McBryde featuring "Jason and the Scorpions."

Friday at 3:00 there will be a four-wheel race in front of Byrnes with Skit Night in the Coliseum at 7:30.

At 8:00 Saturday the WC Lady Eagles take on Appalachian with the Homecoming Rees being introduced.

The main event is at 7:00 with the men taking on Coastal Carolina. During half time the winners of the exhibits and Homecoming Court will be announced. Hey, remember, DRESS TO IMPRESS! So, this week is really going to be exciting! Everyone should participate and make this the best Homecoming EVER!!!

Softball begins March 1

By MARK BIESECKER
TJ sports writer

The Winthrop College women's softball team will enter its eighth season this spring, beginning March 1, with a double header at home against UNC-Charlotte, starting at 1 p.m.

Head Coach Frank Griffin begins his fourth season at the helm of a program noted by EVERY opponent as a force to be reckoned with. However, if the Lady Eagles hope to continue their tradition of success, Griffin and assistant coach Anthony Foster must find the solution to a couple of problems facing them.

Senior right fielder Becky Lemons, an outstanding player and team leader from Vienna, Virginia, will be sidelined for the season due to a shoulder injury. Her injury will be minimal this spring. All-American pitcher Paige Nichols must also hang up her glove. As a player, she will be difficult to replace. However, she will contribute in another way this season, lending advice to the fledgling mound staff.

Michelle Miruski (10-3, ERA 2.81 a year ago) is the lone returnee on the hill. Miruski, the only lefthander. has the potential to shut down any team, and as a veteran, she knows how to deal with pressure. Griffin will look for her to stabilize the pitching staff. Larry Blackmore will follow Miruski. Sisley, a two-time All-American, will be back to anchor the infield, along with a returning second baseman from last season who will move over to third. Freshman Sandy Guillies will play second base. Griffin said, "I have yet to see a freshman with her defensive capabilities. If her offensive punch improves, I think she will be an All-American before leaving Winthrop."

Sandy Donohue, a junior college transfer from Woodsport, N.Y., has the edge at first base. The catching position remains a question mark, with the good candidates in Monica McCudden, Vanessa Glasscock and Arlene Hall. Griffin knows the potential is there for a homecoming change at the infield position, Jullie Hall (Continued on page 8).

Baseball team slated third

By MICHAEL SITTS
TJ sports writer

The Big South Conference preseason picks came out last week, and Winthrop's baseball team was picked to place third in the upcoming season.

Winthrop, who won the championship last year, is ranked behind Campbell (first) and Coastal Carolina (second).

As for next year, Coach Horace Turbeville believes that the team will be more competitive this year as interconference play heats up and rivalries start to develop.

Turbeville believes that there will be more upsets this year. He recognized the fact that the Coastal team will be more stable simply because he has Bob Richardson's second-year Coastal team lost 12 players who saw action last year, while Winthrop lost only two starters from last year.

Coach Horace Turbeville wasn't bothered by the lack of recognition for his defending champs. He said, "It's pretty good in the fact that we still have a young team. Any time you are picked in the top four in an eight-team league, it's a credit to the team."

Turbeville feels that the league will be more competitive this year as interconference play heats up and rivalries start to develop.

The Big South Conference preseason picks came out last week, and Winthrop's baseball team was picked to place third in the upcoming season.

Winthrop, who won the championship last year, is ranked behind Campbell (first) and Coastal Carolina (second).

Being ranked behind Coastal was especially surprising, considering that the Eagles beat the Chanticleers in all three contests between the two last years. Further sucking is Coach Bobby Richardson's second-year Coastal team lost 12 players who saw action last year, while Winthrop lost only two starters from last year.

The Johnsonian has been making desperate pleas for the Budweiser to re-manifest itself-if not in toilet paper, then in something else. Students are right in complaining about the comment about the toilet paper damaging school spirit. It doesn't damage Winthrop's school spirit-there's none to damage. Have you been to the Coliseum lately? Didn't think so.

As for apathy, it extends beyond last year's basketball games. Have you seen this campus on weekends? Or are you one of the myriad of lambs that make that exodus every Friday or so? If we aren't representative of the student population, then be thankful for it, because we were then there would be no Johnsonian-or any other student voice organization, for that matter. Nobody would "bother". Criticism is all right-even appreciated, just so long as you are willing to help try to solve the problem. Think about it.

CHEERS

To Rhonda Hyatt, Marianne Burgess, and Wanda Morrow. These three cheerleaders are filling spots on the women's tennis team so that the college is able to field a team. These girls may be out of their league, but they are certainly not outclassed. It takes a lot of courage and dedication to go out and compete against superior opponents. Go for it, girls.

To the men's tennis team. These men look like they are ready to rock 'n roll.

This wraps it up for this week. See ya later.

Other wrestlers featured include Ron Galvin, Ragin' Bull, Jimmy Valiant, Barbarian, Baron Von Rasche, Tully Blanchard, Sam Houston, Nikita Koloff, Arn Anderson, J.J. Dillon and Baby Doll (of course). Last month's matches (Jan. 28) drew a crowd of 5,032, second largest ever to be on hand at the coliseum. Good seats are still available. Ticket prices are $7.50, reserved and ringside, $6.50, general admission, $3.00 for children under ten.

Time is running out

If you’ve got a few seconds, let’s talk about the clock.

Rule 9, Section 9 of the 1985-86 NCAA rulebook reads: “The team in control shall attempt to try for a field goal within 45 seconds after gaining team control.”

Fine. But I have some questions.

The clock in women’s college basketball is 30 seconds. The clock in the NBA is 24. So why is the men’s clock 45 seconds? Why should it take them 15 seconds longer to move the ball downcourt than it does in women’s basketball?

I think the assets of the clock, which will be in effect in the NCAA’s Division I this year, are many.

First, there will be no more “bore” games, no 19-12 or 13-11 stuff. Another asset is that the coaches will now recruit more small guards for outside shooting. And that, in reality, the game will be played quickly only in the minds of the players, while the actual scores will not increase.

Now for the liabilities.

The clock will help the schools with the best material. The rich will get richer. Remember, all the rules that have been instituted in the last 10 years have been an asset to the dynasties, and this is no different. All teams will be playing postgame-stamp zones, especially at the tailend of the 45 seconds. What you’re going to see, during each 45-second bite, is multiple facades on defense. First, you’ll see pressure upcourt, a hard man-to-man, then the team is going to hit the Hail Mary defense at mid-court, and finally a tight zone around the paint.

Another thing you’ll see is that tall teams who have the lead will completely collapse on in because without it, you’re going to create a situation where you see nothing but zones. The clock had to come, but it’s still too long. 45 seconds is a lifetime. Shorten it.

What the clock will do, at 45 seconds, is take too much of the coaching out of the game. I’ll change certain coaches’ strategies, especially those that can’t recruit. They’ll have to try the Hail Mary game, start to finish.

Remember another thing: There’s no way that two of the last three NCAA champions, North Carolina State and last year Villanova, would have won the title if there had been a 45-second clock, because their material was a mismatch. Because it takes away too much coaching strategy, like spreading out the offense, eating up the clock, things like that.

If it doesn’t work, run it over again. That’s what Jim Valvano and Rollie Massimino did. If the clock had been there, they wouldn’t have had the time.

There’s no questions that the clock reduces a lot of coaching strategy, especially among the Glasscocks. The Dynasties, of course, will love it. But what we’ve created, is that we’ve made it just about impossible for anybody to break into the top 40. That is, without an NCAA investigation.

Group Press to reform law student recruiting

(CPS) Charging law firms “distract and deflect” law students from academies with “high salaries and big dinners,” administrators now want firms to help them reform and revamp the way students get jobs by 1987.

The discontent with the way firms recruit students became apparent at the recent American Association of Law Schools convention.

The highest-paying firms don’t visit many campuses, and many law students don’t get a crack at the best jobs, the administrators said.

At the conference, members of the National Association for Law Placement (NALP) said firms generally ignore thousands of qualified students by focusing on just a handful of schools.

Judges trolling through law schools to find clerks aren’t much better, adds Stephen Yandle, associate dean of Yale Law School.

Firms often court students only from “the most prestigious” schools, figuring they can’t afford to travel to many campuses or “don’t have an effective way to gather and consider more resumes,” Yandle says.

While students at some schools virtually are ignored, students at the “prestigious” universities must cope with intense competition from classmates and pressure from recruiters.

“It creates an adverse impact on students’ values,” Yandle explains. “It suggests students should make career decisions based on the highest bidder: who can pay most and by the biggest dinner.”

Students “try to make themselves appealing in those ways,” in some cases by falsifying resumes, he says.

Moreover, recruiters disrupt school work by pulling students out of class for interviews, and by not confining campus visits to a few specific weeks in the spring, as NALP has suggested.

But law firms apparently don’t like the process much, either.

“Some schools have a rule that a firm has to interview everybody who signs up,” says Fred Franklin, director of the Students (BACCHUS), a group in the American Bar Association’s legal education section.

“If the firm doesn’t have that partners, whose time is money, much time, (it) won’t visit the Strudler adds.”

But just as some firms creating data banks of resumes overlook low-profile schools, and other information to screen some students overlook less applicants without having to deal with the public sectors, laments More and more frequently, 18 NALP President Lynn Strudler, or 20 law schools will sponsor assistant dean of New York regional recruiting firms, which University’s law school.

“It’s really hard to get students interested in any of the potential interest,” she says. “Even employers commit to them a hard time, because employers won’t have the money to come to campus or market themselves.”

Less-money firms have started their own “reasonably successful” reforms, she says.

Some have joined consortia in which a student interviews for many firms at one time. Others hire third party interviewers rather than spare one of their

Florida aims to moderate drinking

(CPS) The capitals of spring break hedonism—Daytona Beach and Fort Lauderdale—are trying to change their images.

Both communities are sponsoring organized activities aimed at somehow moderating student drinking during the spring break invasions of March and April.

“What has gone on before was a Sodom and Gomorrah affair,” says Jerry Nolan, spokesman for Daytona’s National Collegiate Sports Festival, which is supposed to draw students into activities more constructive than those with which Sodom, Gomorrah, Daytona and Fort Lauderdale generally are associated.

“The festival demonstrates we are getting away from the tarnished image of the past,” he says.

Daytona and the other vacation spots in Florida don’t have much of a choice.

This is the first spring break during which the state’s new 21-year-old minimum drinking age law is in effect, and rising insurance costs are forcing communities to find ways to minimize the the wild partying that has led to injuries and even deaths in the past.

Fort Lauderdale, for one, is sponsoring an “Olympics” featuring volleyball, a tug-of-war and various dance and trivia contests.

City officials actively are discouraging excessive drinking, and have banned alcohol consumption on the strip along the beach.

Daytona Beach hopes to attract up to 20,000 students to its first National Collegiate Sports Festival.

The festival, scheduled for March 8 through April 6, will feature about 20 different sports ranging from rugby to golf.

Four national corporations— including Walt Disney and about 30 Daytona businesses are supporting the events.

Nolan hopes the festival also will encourage more corporations to support intramural programs on campuses. IM sports, he notes, can use some fund-raising help.

But no one pretends the activities aren’t intended to moderate revelers’ drinking.

“We hope the level of drinking will be lower than in the past,” Daytona Chamber of Commerce representative Betty Wilson says.

Daytona also will mount a poster and radio campaign to promote sensible alcohol consumption.

“This is a very hard year, because employers won’t have the money to come to campus or market themselves.”

Less-money firms have started their own “reasonably successful” reforms, she says.

An encounter with Barry Price

By ROBERT JOLLY
TJ managing editor

The execution of convicted murderer James Terry Roach at 6:16 a.m. Friday, Jan. 10 sparked demonstrations for and against the death penalty.

The execution touched off debate because of Roach's age and mental health. Roach was 17 at the time of the crime and had a degenerative brain disease called Huntington chorea. Governor Dick Riley received pleas from many including Nobel Laureate Mother Theresa and former President Jimmy Carter.

This led pro-death penalty demonstrators to rally in support of their cause.

One such occurrence was the controversial jaunt of nearly 40 people out to meet the death penalty demonstrators. We put up signs for the pros and cons of the death penalty, I bought poster board and sticks and handed out handbills with the story before the prolonged death of Roach.

Roach was convicted seven years ago for the murders of three people, two of which were raped. Nearly a year before Roach's execution, his accomplice, Joseph Carl Shaw, was executed for the same charges.

Question: In one word, describe the occurrence of the event at C.C.I. on the morning of the execution.

Price: Demonstration.

Question: Describe in chronological order the events that led to the demonstration.

Price: At 11 a.m. Thursday, Jan. 10 Chris Hanlon, another T.J. student, and I discussed the possibility of a debate and demonstration. We put up signs for the pros and cons of the death penalty, I bought poster board and sticks and handed out handbills with the story before the prolonged death of Roach.

Roach was convicted seven years ago for the murders of three people, two of which were raped. Nearly a year before Roach's execution, his accomplice, Joseph Carl Shaw, was executed for the same charges.

Question: Who sponsored the demonstration for capital punishment, or a demonstration of revenge and hate for the violent crimes of Roach?

Price: The group as a whole was demonstrating for capital punishment. I probably wouldn't have put much emphasis on it if it had not been for the violent crimes.

Question: How do demonstrations like this one help W.C. or other schools?

Price: As an R.A. and attorney general, I find there isn't a shortage of ideas or causes but there is a shortage of outlets. Students need something to bring them together and let them express their ideas.

Question: Considering the purpose, what part did the reported drinking and tailgating play?

Price: We didn't condone drinking, and asked people not to. Some people may have been drinking on the way, but we advised them not to. We were as sober as we could be. Drinking wouldn't have changed anyone's opinion; it may have made it easier to express it.

Question: Describe in one word the demonstration for capital punishment.

Price: Demonstration.

Question: What part did you play and why?

Price: I played the part of W.C. students at C.C.I. on the morning of the execution.

Encounter —

Question: How would you explain your actions to alumni who saw it on T.V.? Price: We had an opinion to express, we needed to be radical. Without media attention we would have lost the educational gains.

Question: How would you explain your actions to Roach's family?

Price: I have a lot of respect for human life, but I believe there is a lot more to being human than having physical characteristics. The term "human" connotates certain characteristics and social obligations. It is imperative that society punish its criminals and members of society must have a direct input.

Question: How would you respond to his family's pleas because of his youth?

Price: We don't look for causes; therefore, no plans for the future have been made. If a cause should arise, I have no doubt we would demonstrate. Our job is to make people think.

Question: Could this occur again?

Price: If it could have been prevented before the crime, it might have been acceptable; however, we didn't, so he must live by society's laws. We don't need these type of people in our society.

Question: Do you plan any future demonstrations at W.C.?

Price: We don't look for causes; therefore, no plans for the future have been made. If a cause should arise, I have no doubt we would demonstrate. Our job is to make people think.

Question: Could this occurrence have been called a disturbance to the class, as well?

Price: We did celebrate, party, and act festively. Not because someone was going to be killed, rather than the final means of justice had been served.

Question: Do you have any regrets?

Price: My regret is that it took over seven years to carry out his sentence. Capital punishment should be used as a deterrent. Most importantly, I regret that Terry Roach had only one life to give for the three he took.

Question: If you would have been allowed in the death chamber at 6:10 a.m., seconds before the execution of Roach, what would you say to him?

Price: If there is a God, I hope that he is forgiving.

Reynolds offers film class

By CHRIS ROWELL

TJ staff writer

Dr. Les Reynolds is welcoming interested students to join in viewing the "classic" movies that she is presenting for her Drama 330: Introduction to Film class.

According to Reynolds, "The invitation is for interested students to participate without being enrolled in the class, or being obligated in any way."

"We have several outstanding films that movie lovers might enjoy," said Reynolds, "and I would be pleased to have visitors join the class, provided they can come and go without causing a disturbance to the class," she continued.

Each of the films will be evaluated and critiqued afterwards, and visitors have the option to participate or leave.

According to Reynolds, the featured films are mostly foreign films, or films of historical importance.

"The films will be shown on Wednesday afternoons, shortly after 2:00. They are the closest thing to a fine arts film series with the exception of the Sunday film series presented by the College of Arts and Sciences," said Reynolds.

Two short films, "Andalusian Dog" and "Potemkin Odessa Steps," will be shown February 12. The series will continue after spring break with "The Seventh Seal" on March 19. "Citizen Kane" will be shown March 29, followed by "Juliet of the Spirits" on April 5 and "Sophie's Choice" on April 9. All films will be shown in Tillman Auditorium, except "Juliet of the Spirits," which is to be arranged.

Students with questions concerning the films should contact Dr. Les Reynolds at Kinard 332 or extension 2171.
Racial tensions

from the school's mascot when he blew his nose with the Puerto Rican flag at a basketball game. Administrators' slow reaction prompted one professor to note, "If any or us had done this to the American flag, we'd have been fired, or slapped in the face."

At Penn, it was President Sheldon Hackney's slow response—and eventual refusal to intervene—in the Dolfman case that turned a minor incident into a 15-month ordeal that has soured race relations on the campus.

As a result, says Graduate Minorities Council President Wayne Glasker, racial tensions have reached a "crisis point."

Jane Rankin, a former law student, serves as staff counselor and director of testing at Winthrop College's Counseling Center. Rankin's "unexpected" job has come to be very rewarding for her.

Rankin helped get the Counseling Center started in 1972 when Dr. Bill Murdy wrote its proposal. After working full time Rankin returned to school in 1977 to get her doctoral degree in counseling at the University of Georgia in Athens, Ga.

In 1981 Rankin received a call from Dr. Bill Wells, now the director of the counseling problems.

Jacqueline Wade adds students complaining constantly of racism among peers and particularly from the Philadelphia campus police, who recently arrested a black student for refusing to leave the steps of Penn's dental school.

Wade believes the incident would not have happened had the administration responded forcefully to the Dolfman case.

Glasker says racial tensions still could be "defused before they escalate" if the administration would show some interest in student problems.

Otherwise, he says, "it's going to take a crisis to change things, and sooner or later, there's going to be that crisis."

Where administrators have maintained an obvious interest in minority student affairs, tensions seem to vanish quickly.

When a rental service employee in November told a Northwestern student "I don't rent to black people," NU immediately barred discriminatory companies from campus.

Connecticut's Board of Trustees similarly adopted a broad racial harassment policy when it found out white faculty members had derided blacks as "remedial."

At Southern Connecticut State last November, new president Michael Adanti actually joined a group of black students staging a class boycott, handing them a handwritten pledge to hire more black faculty and coaches.

Rankin counsels students at Crawford

QUESTION: What do you consider is the biggest problem on campus now?

RANKIN: I think carelessness is the biggest problem on campus right now. People tend to always think that it will happen to other. You can never be 100 percent safe. The most important thing to do is to be aware!

QUESTION: Winthrop has about 5,000 students enrolled. Is suicide a common problem for a college of this size, and is it always publicized?

RANKIN: We are lucky compared to my colleagues at other institutions. It is fairly common for college-age people to think about it as a passing thought.
QUESTION: What are the most common problems you encounter?

RANKIN: The highest percentage of counseling is concerned with academic problems. The second highest percentage of counseling is concerned with relationship problems and depression. I have found that this stems from a problem with self-esteem. If we all felt good about ourselves, we wouldn’t have as many problems as we have.

QUESTION: What is the process a student goes through when he/she comes to see you, and how confidential is the session?

RANKIN: First, the student sets up an appointment and can request the counselor he/she wants to see. (There are three of us.) If no request is made, the student is seen by the counselor who is first available. On the day of the appointment, the student checks with the secretary’s office before seeing the counselor. Once with the counselor, the student fills out a general information card including such things as name, age, class status and major. The general information card is locked in the secretary’s office. However, the counselors keep files of their own, too. Nobody sees these except the counselor (and maybe the client if interested). These files are kept for two years after the student graduates. They are then destroyed. Our business is very important to the client. The confidentiality is very important to the client. The only way someone else sees the files is by court order. We have to give the court system any information we may have that they may find helpful, but only in the case of a subpoena.

QUESTION: You have been associated with the Counseling Center from the beginning. Have you recognized any significant differences in the kinds of people and the types of problems you’ve seen since the Counseling Center first opened, 13 years ago, as compared to now?

RANKIN: At first, Winthrop was an all-girls’ school. But after it became coed and males started using the counseling center, I found that they had the same problems as the females did.

QUESTION: Are there any specialties of the counseling center? Do you focus on any particular areas more than others?

RANKIN: There are three counselors at the center, and we all have our special areas in which we work more than others. I am involved in personal counseling with students on any subject. I will listen to anyone about anything. If none of the counselors can help, we will work with the student on a referral. I also do some counseling with faculty and staff members. My specialty is programming for prevention workshops like sexual awareness, sexual assault, stress, etc. I do a lot of work on campus concerning sexual awareness.

QUESTION: Is rape a very big issue on this campus?

RANKIN: A survey of sophomore college students was taken at a college up north. The results found were: one out of six college sophomore males said that they had, at one time or another, forced a female companion to have sex. Results also showed that one out of six college sophomore females admitted to having been forced to commit some type of sexual act. These survey results were said to apply to all college campuses. Winthrop would be included. There have been quite a few attempts of Winthrop students reported in the last three years. Statistics show that only one out of every 10 rapes that occur is reported. It scares me to think of the girls that face such a traumatic experience alone.

QUESTION: Who are the other counselors at the center, and what are their special areas of work?

RANKIN: Dr. Bill Wells is one of the counselors. He works with problems of eating disorders. The other counselor is Dee Hamilton, and she works mostly with alcohol and drug abuse, and study skills counseling.

QUESTION: Are you involved in any other activities or organizations?

RANKIN: Yes, I have a private practice in Rock Hill. I also started teaching last summer for the college. I taught in the psychology department over the summer, but I am now teaching a master’s level course in the school of education. I work with the court system too. I serve as a guardian ad litem for the child.

QUESTION: Do you find yourself thinking about an earlier counseling session over supper or when you lie down at night?

RANKIN: No, good therapists don’t take problems home with them. I worry about those who do.
