TUESDAY, MAY 4.

The dividends being declared by some cotton mills would indicate that they could pay two dollars per pound for "king cotton," and then make big money.

Everybody, including The News, is perfectly willing to make suggestions to a new council about what ought to be done in and around Chester. The News takes this opportunity to state that the attention has been called to the fact that some of the public draymen of Chester are charging exorbitant prices for hauling. One citizen expressed it as "hold up" game. It appears that council should provide a schedule of rates for the draymen since some of them are disproporionately to join the "proffers club."

York street from Walnut to the Sabatini crossing has been opened to traffic, and the "speeders" are already trying out their machines. Sunday afternoon two automobiles were going in the same direction were making "some speed." To an observer it was apparent that each of the drivers was endeavoring to beat the other fellow. Chester's speed limit of fifteen miles per hour was left in the far distance.

A newspaper, it seems, is supposed to know all things about a town's affairs. The News is being asked almost every day about what has become of the street sprinkler. To be frank, we do not know and herewith refer the matter to the city father with power to act.

A Blessing That is Passing.

The march of progress is depriving society of many good old-fashioned blessings that helped to make life in the past so comfortable and well known. Among them is that of neighborhoodliness, a rare enough quality, indeed, in these days, but one that blossomed like a flower when life flowed evenly about what was good. It was the spirit of good will and comradeship reigned among friends everywhere. Men had time to take interest in these little bits of life that added charm and flavor to existence and they took advantage of their opportunity. Today it is the exception, save in those few isolated communities that are more blessed than is realized, for anyone to dispense the spirit of neighborhoodness far and wide. A man may be friendly to those with whom he comes in constant association but to those many others who cross his path in different ways he does nothing but a cold greeting. We argue today that we lack the time in which to perform our multiplicity of duties and to catch a few moments deserved rest or recreation for ourselves without troubling about extending the hand of good fellowship to those in whom we are not particularly interested. We live today for months and even years at a time without knowing who our next-door neighbor is. Of course not those who live day in and day out on the same block. But in those parts of the larger towns and cities inhabited by persons who rent their homes the personnel of the tenants change rapidly. For a long time here in Charleston was the custom to call on each new family that moved into the neighborhood, but scarcely had the acquaintance begun or shown evidence of rising to a friendly friendship when the tie was broken and new faces appeared in their places. After a while one grew weary of making friends only to lose them and largely for this reason the good old custom of welcoming the newcomer gradually ceased, and men and women know only by sight, and rarely by name, those who live in the house adjoining.

It may be that the newcomers are indifferent and prefer to make their own friends in their own way, but it is hard to think that a stranger moving into a new town would not appreciate a spirit of neighborhoodliness from the "inhabitants." There was a time when tempting trays of good things passed from one house into the next, or when flowers were handed across the fence, or when a cup of hot butter was confidently borrowed and cheerfully lent to help out in an emergency. Of course present-day prices are a certain check to such generous give-and-take methods, but even before prices soared the custom of helping each other out of certain culinary difficulties has lessened, and the very good reason that we didn't know who lived next door and didn't care. We held our individual friends, perhaps, but we lost the inexplicable charm of leaving our doors wide open to those who cared to enter.

It was a fine old custom, even if it did have some drawbacks, it helped to develop the more generous side of human nature and to quicken our sympathies. We kept our hearts wide open as our doors, and the rewards were rich and stimulating. The words were right today makes it impossible for the average person to live in close intimacy with his neighbors. Instead, the next door "foes" are not spiced neighbors any more. They are merely necessary factors in life's problems and we pass them by, and they pass us by, each apparently oblivious of the other's existence. This is particularly true of the large centers of population where men and women are so much engaged in the making of a living that they have forgotten how to make a home. The trend of the times stresses the way of life of today and pulls hard against the vestments of a quiet life serenely spent. It may be that we are gaining more than we have lost, but only time will confirm that supposition. The girls and boys of today know nothing whatever of the healthy satisfaction of a sane, steadily increasing temptations that the present demoralized conditions bring. They probably would regard manifestations of old-time neighborliness as out of place and unnecessary, but for all the zest which some persons have added to life nothing has yet been offered that can quite take the place of the sweet familiar spirit which was the rule not so very, very many years ago.

HON. CHARLES O. JORDAN.

Slipshod Methods.

Slipshod methods are perhaps the cause of more inefficiency than any other one thing. Of course he who is careful and thorough training does not make for success in this world, but there are many cases in which despite the more earnest preparation, certain lines of endeavor the individual becomes indifferent and gradually falls into careless ways of working. In the most important lines of his work until the last moment and then by slurring over it in the desperate effort to accomplish the separate effort to acquire the habit of doing it in a slipshod way. After a while he will find that he begins to think in a more slipshod way. There are some of us, no doubt, who really do not know what we want to do. We never seem to get very far in our work, but occasionally we may hit the mark by chance and immediately we congratulate ourselves on our efficiency. However, when luck does not continue to follow our efforts we become impatient and probably blame our lack of successful accomplishment upon our slipshod methods. The small experience demonstrates to the observant worker that concentration is one of the most important factors in the life of the individual. He soon finds out that he cannot make any headway whatever unless he learns how to concentrate his mind upon the object in hand. This has been the experience of all men and women who have made places for themselves in the world, or who have achieved any degree of success. The power itself may not give come easily to them; indeed we learn that many of the world's most prominent figures failed repeatedly before discovering wherein lay their inability to bring about desired results. They may apply themselves for the moment only, and because we do not achieve immediate success we become discouraged and faint of heart. It is caused by inexperience, that we gradually mold into success, and are few who are able to keep from the end, and will, enough if we were wise, to concentrate upon the task in hand to the exclusion of all other goals of ambition, would perhaps save years of discouraged effort if not of total failure.

Present day tendency, it would seem to dissipate our mental power by spreading it broadcast over many fields of effort instead of narrowing it down to one special ambition. We know that we want to attain a certain success, but we do not decide upon the exact road to the goal of our desire. We think in a hazy way of some of which seems to bring us any nearer, and finally after we have "practically" exhausted our strength and wasted the best years of our life we accept the fact that in order to succeed, no matter in what direction our ambition leads, we must concentrate upon the object and the end. We must stop drawing at will upon those mental forces upon which we must depend for the success of our life. We must build up those forces and strengthen them so that when we have made our decision and press forward confidently in the way of our ambition, points we shall find it possible to bring all our powers of concentration to bear upon the end we seek. This rule holds true in all relations of life, and especially so in the business world. No man can ever hope to accomplish anything worthwhile unless he is willing and tempted him in order to lay firm foundations upon which to build, and then to expand by degrees in the future. We help ourselves best by punishing ourselves at first, because voluntary surrender of pleasant diversions is a vigorous discipline to those not used to it. We must make good first, however, and then will come the opportunity to enjoy those pleasures we desired in the past which will be all the sweeter and all the more enjoyable because we rest easy in the consciousness of duty well done.

Concentration upon the task in hand, no matter how insignificant it may seem to be, makes its accomplishment easier and thereby more quickly brings mental relief, because when we begin to worry over our work and our equipment are likely to perform it, we become irritable and sometimes ill-tempered. Concentration, however, in an undivided manner, demonstrates its usefulness by quickly restoring our mental poise. The person who cannot concentrate labors under a handicap that will eventually ruin his prospects. It is the part of wisdom, indeed, to learn how to develop this powerful ally so that its influence will make our efforts easier and our rewards richer. It is a power that is worked to the best advantage when we are hindered or removed, as such conditions, disturbing interruptions and irritating influences, and when we are determined to put forth our best efforts upon the problem in hand.

The Naked Truth

In Like a Doubled-Edge Sword, It Cuts Both Ways

Along the pathway of time sweeping changes lay the plumed and the unshorn, the lofty and the petty and little, all victims of the "Credit Ledger" under whose terrific laws no amount of courage, enterprise, genius or ambition could ever hope to win in the fierce and unequal struggle for Mastery. The problem of debtor and creditor has baffled the foremost thinkers of mercantile history. The credit ledger is doomed, but not its fatal folds have been crushed some of the grandest and ambitious that ever fired the immortal soul. Occasionally a merchant doing a credit business emerges from the fiery furnace, crowned with the laurels of victory but the most casual observer will notice a century of care seared upon his brow. In the great cities of the north there are hundreds of retail merchants many of whom are as handsome as Apollo, and brave as Julius Caesar, but who really and truly enjoy more about mauling rats than managing the intricate mysteries connected with mercantile affairs.

King Credit, the love of slumber, leisure and pleasure, gambling on Wall Street instead of honest toil, resorting to strong stimulants to keep on the go instead of refreshing slumber, automobile races, box parties at the theatre and mid-night diners. In other words living at High Tension, instead of the simple life. Disipation destroys reason, saps the powers of analysis, shatters the brain fibre and nerve fabric and leads to early decay. Wherever a merchant is found trying to mix business and pleasure, it is not long before you can see the Red Flag of the sheriff and here we are constantly receiving mercantile annihilation with which we expect to silence establishment in whatever shape. A visit to our mercantile establishment will convince the most skeptical that the brain tearing problem of debtor and creditor is fully and finally answered by the musical metallic ring of the American Dollar.

This Medicine Recommended by a Doctor

DR. J. H. WAGNER
When a doctor prescribes it to his patient, he must know that it has merit. This is what Dr. J. H. Wagner, a prominent physician of State, Kentucky, has to say about Dr. Wagner's well-known remedy, PE-RU-NA. "I have used PE-RU-NA myself for catarrh and have given it to others for catarrh, bladder, kidney and other ailments. It has proved a success in all cases with old and young men and women. All speak highly of PE-RU-NA. It is the best of all." Dr. Wagner, out of the fullness of his own personal experience, for the good of all sick and suffering, recommends a medicine which he knows to be good. You may hire a doctor, but you cannot damage his professional reputation by endorsing PE-RU-NA unless satisfied beyond a doubt of its value. Whether your trouble be a cough or a cold, or a more acute catarrhal affliction of the stomach, bowels or other organs, PE-RU-NA is what you need. The immediate improvement which you will see will satiate any doubt that PE-RU-NA is what you need. PE-RU-NA may be purchased anywhere in tablet or liquid form.

Big Mad Dog Scare

J. C. Wallace, of Yorkville, who has just returned from a trip to the Great Falls country, where he went to see his brother, John A. Wallace, who accidentally shot himself in the big eye last week, says that the whole country down that way is tremendously excited on account of hydrophobia. A dog belonging to a negro, who lives not a great distance from Great Falls ran amuck recently and bit two men in the neighborhood. One of the dogs was killed and an examination of its head in Columbia, it was found to have been afflicted with hydrophobia. The two men who had been bitten went to Columbia for treatment as did also the man who had cut off the dog's head, he having gone because he had got some of the dog's blood on a screw. Three calves and a cow belonging to William Stone who lives near Great Falls showed signs of rabies and were killed by John A. Wallace. On his return home Mr. Wallace saw a cat in the neighborhood, as if it might be suffering from hydrophobia and started to draw his pistol for the purpose of shooting it. The weapon was discharged accidentally and the bullet after passing through Mr. Wallace's hip for a distance of several inches went into the ground through the seat of the automobile. Mr. Wallace was not seriously hurt. According to Mr. J. C. Wallace, the people have become so stirred up that they are unwilling to move about without providing themselves with weapons with which to defend themselves in case of attack. Yorkville Enquirer.

In Chester County Jail

Mark Hudson, Oscar Crockett, Kelly Jones and Chester McKinney, all colored, are in the Chester county jail charged with transporting whiskey and extracts. All four of those mentioned above claim Lancaster as their residence and it was while they were enroute from that place to Chester that Sheriff Anderson captured negro booze and automobile.

Yorkshire Sheriff Anderson and Constable Deitz were in the Richburg section on official business and while enroute back to Chester a Humболь automobile, carrying four negroes, passed them like a freight train, passed a section car. However the negroes stopped a few miles after passing the Sheriff and when he drove up they appeared at an investigation might be in order. The investigation revealed that the negroes had about a quart of whiskey, some extracts, and a little Best Wine and Iron.

Sheriff Anderson took charge of the gang and brought the McKinney where they were landed safely in the jail. The automobile is also held and will probably be sold at auction one of these days, the proceeds going to the country. It is stated that the car belongs to Hudson.

The negroes were coming from Lancaster to attend a basketball game here yesterday and were doubtless counting on having a very enjoyable trip, when they happened to come in contact with the officers mentioned above.

Mr. P. B. Branch held yesterday afternoon for New Orleans to attend the annual meeting of the Southern Secretaries' Association.

Caldwell the convention, by a rising vote, endorsed the administration of President Wilson and extended its sympathy to him in his illness.

The matter of selecting six delegates to the State Convention was then taken up. Mr. J. R. Reid made a motion that they be nominated from the floor. Mr. E. W. Gibson seconded an amendment which would call for a nominating committee consisting of one from each township who would nominate the six delegates. A vote was taken on the question, 23 favoring Mr. Boyd's plan and 23 favoring Mr. Reid. Each township then nominated a member of the committee which resulted as follows: Chester, J. R. Westbrook; Baton Rouge, W. E. T. Wade; Blackstock, S. T. McKeown; Hallsville, W. T. McDaniel; Hazelwood, A. M. McKeown; Landsford, R. H. Fudge; Lewisville, R. B. Reid; Kostler, J. R. P. Gibson. This committee brought in the following recommendations: H. W. Miller, D. S. Hollis, E. W.

Loss of Self-Confidence.

It is loss of faith in ourselves that makes us willing to give up the fight and let things take their course. Some of us may call it discouragement, or despondency, but if we have the will to question the reasons that have led us into so unhappy a condition we shall find that they resolve themselves into a matter of the loss of confidence in ourselves. There are times when to us all when life, for the moment at least, seems to corner us, when, despite our earnest efforts and high hopes, we are unable to cope against the obstacles that block our path. We may make a brave fight for a while, but unless we are able to keep ourselves well in hand and look above and beyond the doubts that assail and the gloom that envelops our viewpoint, we shall by degrees lose that confidence in our own efforts without which we cannot make good. What does it matter if life does corner us at times? There is always a "wide field" of usefulness waiting somewhere for some brave spirit to work to its limit. What though we do feel handicapped and shut off from following those lines of effort that appeal to us? There are other duties to be done and other work to be accomplished that may yield richer harvests than those we had anticipated.

The fact is that most of us go to great pains and much trouble to construct our lives according to our own ideas. We think out things for ourselves and prepare to put our plans into execution, forgetting all about the uncertainty of life and the many handicaps and disappointments we are sure to meet with. Repeated disappointments condition some persons and make them give up to what seems to them the inevitable, but as long as there is any fight in a man, no matter how hard pressed he may be, he still retains in himself and in his powers of accomplishment and consequently there is always the chance that he may yet gain his ends. Men, as a rule, give a great deal of thought to constructing their lives, and when fate intervenes and smashes all their plans and all their hopes, they yield to their discouragement, instead of getting to work at once to reconstruct their lives. It is remarkable how little thought we give to the chances we all have of making over those waste places in our lives that so far have yielded nothing worthwhile. Because conditions are not favorable to our development along the lines which appeal the most to us we lose faith in our ability to reconstruct our ideas and our actions. We do not think of doing so perhaps, because we have been too much taken up with our own individual plans to take notice of how many other opportunities there are. Accordingly, when we feel that we have failed we come to the conclusion immediately that life holds nothing more for us, and that we can begin over again, on other lines, to be sure, but lines that may after all prove very much worth while.

We do not all come easily into our own as far as life in this world is concerned. Some persons seem never able to achieve their ambition and become discontented, dissatisfied lives. If they could have looked beyond the doubts and disappointments that overcame them they would have discovered that it would be far better to take up the task of making over their lives after another pattern of their own choosing, even if not as appealing, than to lose self-confidence and submit to being "cornered" by the odds. Certain obstacles are insurmountable at one time it does not follow that they shall always remain so. Judge of the new experiences that come with a change in our manner of living often bring about other changes in our viewpoints which though immovable. If we cannot construct our lives in just the manner we would like we can at least make the most of our failures. Reconstructed lives are, often, filled to overflowing with blessings that would not have been possible in other conditions. The power of reconstruction is a tremendous influence for good if understood and made to bear upon our lives in a wholesome way. It requires that our faith in ourselves that is so essential a part of our work here below, and gives us the chance to feel that once again we are on par with our fellow beings, able and willing to render good service, not afraid of what may come because we have already borne so much, and determined to win out by sheer force of our own exertions.

FEDERAL AND STATE FORCES ARE READY

Chicago, April 30.—Federal and city forces are prepared to combat any overt act that might grow out of the 25th anniversary celebration of May day.

Sixty motor suspects were rounded up by the police today in a continuing line of the drive that resulted in arrest of more than 300 men and several women last night. One of the men, who gave his name as John Jack, was arrested while distributing handbills announcing a May day meeting. Some of the bills urged revolt by "the revolutionary practice" by the police said.
