Everything At Winthrop College Is New To Renae Barillas Except Uniforms

By DOUGLAS CORE

"Yes, the first time I was here was when I was a little girl, and I was brought here by my parents. I have been coming back every year since then, and I really enjoy the Christmas spirit here. It's so different from home, where everything is decorated and filled with joy.

WTS Offers Duo Study

Last year there were 25 Winthrop college students who did graduate work in the field of Winthrop's psychology. The majority of these students received their training in the Training school. One-third of the teachers in South Carolina today are Winthrop graduates, and the majority of these teachers received their training in the Training school under the supervision of the Winthrop faculty members.

The Training school, a department of Winthrop college and the only one of its kind in South Carolina, is a continuation of the college's tradition of training students for careers in education. The college subscribes to the belief that the preparation of teachers should be closely related to the needs of the schools and the students they are to serve.

The Training school is a part of the Winthrop college system and is under the supervision of the college's psychology department. It is designed to provide opportunities for students to gain practical experience in teaching and to develop their professional skills in the field of education.

Winthrop's 1951-1952 season begins with the introduction of the Junior Dolphin Club, a group of students who take an active role in the college's musical activities. The club is open to all students and provides a platform for students to express their musical talents and participate in various musical events.

"In that mode I haven't actually put in work of the other..."

"Maybe we're in the conservatory instead of the gym..."

"I've never heard of a gym before..."

But if some smart author who knows all the answers had been present, it would have been clear that the conservatory freshmen would have said, "This is the Dolphin pool practicing synchronized swimming."

The goal of both Dolphin clubs is to create a sense of unity and camaraderie among the students and faculty. They are housed in the Library of Congress, and the Dolphin pool is located in the state-of-the-art Winthrop Building.

The Dolphin team consists of both men and women, and both clubs have been known to compete with each other in friendly matches. The club is open to all students and provides a platform for students to express their musical talents and participate in various musical events.
