President Jamie Comstock

ROCK HILL, S.C. - In remarks at her March 28 Investiture Ceremony, Winthrop University President Jamie Comstock announced that more than $1.1 million has been raised for a fund created just seven weeks ago to support the integration of access and quality at Winthrop.

A total of 258 individuals have collectively contributed to the Dare to Rise fund which will make degree attainment a reality for all deserving students who want to transform their opportunities through higher education. Information on the fund was shared with constituents in February when invitations to Comstock's Inauguration were mailed.

"The goals of the Dare to Rise fund seem to resonate with many people who view higher education as a way to ignite individual potential, inspire individual achievement, and improve life in our state and in our nation," Comstock said.

The idea for the fund grew out of a generous $2.2 million gift received from the estate of Dr. Ann Coleman Peyton in December. Comstock was inspired to create the Dare to Rise fund as a special initiative to support students in all majors and bolster the vision of Winthrop as uniquely positioned to offer quality and access in a singular institution.

The Dare to Rise fund will galvanize a spectrum of initiatives designed to ensure the highest caliber of instruction and support for students and allow Winthrop to promote a program of "inclusive excellence" through need-based financial aid.

"The fund will serve as a bridge connecting the successful past with a promising future and aligns with my steadfast belief that all students – regardless of their demographic category or life experience – deserve the kind of education that an exceptional institution like Winthrop provides," Comstock said.

The fund will support a new program Comstock also announced at the ceremony. She noted Winthrop recently learned the university was one of only 10 institutions nationally to be selected for the American Council on Education's Change and Innovation Lab. Winthrop's program, RISE – Realizing Investments in Student Engagement, will provide intensive academic counseling and career mentoring for all first-generation, undergraduate freshmen and transfer students. The program also will ensure these students have opportunities to engage in high-impact practices that will enhance their prospects for degree attainment and post-graduate success.

Contributors to the Dare to Rise fund include 100 percent of Winthrop's Board of Trustees, President's Advisory Council, senior advancement staff, and the Academic Leadership Council, not to mention the significant contributions received from faculty, staff, retirees, alumni, and friends of Winthrop.
