Winthrop fees may rise

By JUDY ALSTON

Academic fees at Winthrop could rise next fall depending on how much money the college receives from the General Assembly. According to the Evening Herald, a committee of Winthrop College trustees approved a range of academic fee hikes for next fall. The full board of trustees is expected to consider the proposed tuition hikes April 27.

Spring Fling a success

By JEFF COLEMAN
TJ staff writer

Spring Fling 1985 was a success according to Tom Webb, director of Dinkins Student Union.

The April 13 event went as planned, except for the inclement weather, but Webb expressed that he was "pleased with the crowd." The only thing that was hampered by the weather was the hot air balloon. Webb reported that the "gusty winds" prevented the hot air balloon flight from taking place.

Webb said that approximately 1,100 people were in attendance for the annual event.

The event consisted of a ping pong drop, a skydive by Dr. John Dille and free prizes. Entertainment was provided by the Erase Street Band. T-shirts for the event were also sold and are still on sale for $4. There was also an ultra light flight with Webb as a passenger.

Webb said that the new drinking age presented no noticeable difference in attendance or in beer sales. Webb explained that the purpose of the event is "to have a good time" within the realms of the law. He says that as far as he knows there were "very few violations" of the alcohol and drinking laws.

Webb stated that, "Alcohol Beverage Control (ABC) officials were in attendance to help prevent and remove any violators of the statute."

Webb said that a lot of students wonder why Spring Fling is not free to all Winthrop students. He reported that "a certain budget is set aside for Spring Fling" but that the amount in no way covers all of the expenses. The $2 cover charge is used to supplement the assigned budget.

According to Webb, the band cost is approximately $1,200, the portable stage approximately $600, and the printed cups around $300; in addition to cost of the skidders, security guards, tents, portable toilets, and several other items.

Webb expressed his gratitude for the countless number of students who volunteered to assist with the event. He says that "a lot of students don't realize what all goes into the making of such an event."

"Students volunteered to help with LD. checks, beer sales, security checks, and other minor but essential duties such as the placement of tents the night before and the cleanup process after the event," Webb continued.

Webb also sent his appreciation out to all of the students and faculty who attended Spring Fling '85 to help make it a success.

"Love your library"

National Library Week held

By DONNA CAPPS
TJ staff writer

Winthrop celebrated National Library Week last April through Saturday. This was Winthrop's first conservative awareness of the library services on campus. The theme of the week was "Love your library! Give the people the tools they need, and there is no limit to what they achieve."

National Library Week began in 1959. The main purpose of the week is to fight against censorship, a big problem to librarians today. Cases of censorship have doubled since 1982. There are some who feel that classics such as Mark Twain's Huck Finn, J.D. Salinger's Catcher in the Rye, and Ken Kesey's One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest should not be censored.

Libraries are a changing institution. "Today's libraries are not just a repository and dispensor of books. They offer a wide array of services to many different kinds of users, including the handicapped, people in isolated rural communities, the disadvantaged and children of all ages," said Ron Chepesiuk, Winthrop archivist. Card catalogs are an example of this change. They will soon be replaced by computers. A display of this was given last Monday from 1-8 p.m. at Dacus.

A slide show was also given by Chepesiuk and a presentation on an alternative to buy a book "What Genealogists Need to Know about Archives." Chepesiuk said, "There are more people who are interested in genealogy than there are people who play Trivial Pursuit."

Thursday was dedicated to book repair. From 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. there was a workshop for librarians and at 7 p.m. there was a presentation to the general public. The main speaker was John Dean, Collection and Maintenance officer from Johns Hopkins University.

On Friday, there was a class from 1935 Arts and Craft Show and later that evening, a reception for the class of 1935. This class was very special during this week because on Saturday it presented a $15,000 gift which will be used to develop a special library collection of books in computer science. Dean Shirley Tartlon accepted the gift at the Alumni Luncheon.

All week long, people came and signed up to "Buy a Book for Dacus." Books cost around $30, Chepesiuk.

Carl Sagan, of Cosmos, states, "The health of our civilization, the depth of our awareness about the underpinnings of our culture and our concern for the future can all be tested by how well we support our libraries."

Libraries will continue depending on the public in order to keep on doing good work. "Visit our libraries. We would love to have you," concluded Chepesiuk.
Art department accredited

By JEFF COLEMAN
TJ staff writer

Winthrop's Art Department recently received accreditation by the National Association of Schools of Art and Design (NASAD). This is the only accredited agency sanctioned by the Department of Education of Art.

According to Wade Hobgood, chairman of Winthrop's Art Department, "the department becomes the first in the state to be bestowed with such a honor, and is one of only two in the Carolinas."

East Carolina University has the only accredited department in North Carolina. There are approximately 100 colleges and universities in the United States with accredited Art Departments.

Hobgood calls the honor "pretty significant" as far as quality and achievement are concerned. He says that the honor is actually a reflection of the college as a whole.

Hobgood feels that by becoming accredited, "the recognition will be noticed by the general public and invite more serious art students to apply to Winthrop, not to say that the students now are lacking, but that a larger number will hopefully be attracted."

He explains that the honor should make it "easier for art students to go to graduate school, as well as guarantee them a certain quality of employment."

Hobgood also reports that NASAD advised the department to acquire more art slides and to increase the number of books in the library concerning art.

According to a recent NASAD handbook, a few of the aims and objectives of the association are to "assure students and parents that accredited art and design programs provide competent teachers, adequate plant and equipment and sound curricular plans and are capable of sustaining their stated objectives, and to establish a national forum to stimulate the understanding and acceptance of the education in the creative arts in higher education in the U.S."

Hobgood reports that the accreditation is good for up to five years, in which a new evaluation will be made.

Alumni Weekend held

Winthrop College held its annual Alumni Weekend April 19-21.

Winthrop Alumni who graduating class ended in "0" or "5" celebrated individual reunions. The Alumni had a chance to see the changes on campus and the new and ongoing renovations.

According to the Director of Alumni Relations, Martie Curran, "Alumni Weekend has been going on for a very, very long time and it gets bigger every year."

The Alumni Association was also involved in the program. Students did everything from escorting and hosting to decorating Byrnes Auditorium.

The weekend began on Friday at 2 p.m. with registration in Tillman Hall. Curran said, "This is an exciting time because people came back for the first time in years."

She also went on to say that "the fact that 800 people came showed a renewed interest in Winthrop College on the part of the alumni."

The Alumni Association began planning this event in February.

Members of the Alumni Association Executive Board served as general host and hospitality personnel for the weekend.

Co-op presents banquet

By JULIE THOMAS
TJ staff writer

The Co-op banquet, sponsored by the Cooperative Education Program at Winthrop, will be held in McBryde Wednesday, April 24 at 6 p.m.

In the past, the program only featured presentations by students. This year, however, a dinner will be included as well. The group is headed by John McCall, a designer on campus, whose students are involved with renovations on campus.

The student presentations will be given by Susan Heffnew, a computer science major, working for IBM in Charlotte; Cameron Malcom, a Fashion Merchandising major, working for Belk stores in Charlotte; and Jody Brown, a communications major, working in the Public Information Office on campus.

The banquet will be given for the students and their advisors who participated in the co-op program. These students were allowed to invite other students and prospective employers who might be interested in the program.

The Co-op Faculty Member Award and the Employer of the Year Award will also be awarded at the banquet.

Scholarship winner

Congratulations to Tammy Knox who won the Alpha Kappa Psi key and scholarship awards. Tammy is a computer science major from Rock Hill and is graduating in April.

A dream house comes true
By KIM ODOM

Who would buy a chair that you can't sit in, or a stove that won't cook, or even a piano that will not play a single note.

Apparently many people across the United States have found out that such a purchase is not as silly as it sounds. Doll house furniture collectors have begun flocking to stores, fairs, and auctions everywhere to furnish their mini-houses.

These collectors claim that furnishing a doll house can be even more fun and even more time consuming than furnishing your own home. One local student from Winthrop College has been collecting for her doll house since she was 13 years old.

Becky Hamilton from Columbia began her doll house collection seven years ago and is still furnishing her same house. "My neighbors had a large four room doll house that they had filled full of furniture. They wanted a larger house so they put the one they had up for sale. I bought this house from them empty for fifty dollars," said Hamilton.

Many houses can be bought or built at a fairly low cost. Others can be bought for hundreds or even thousands of dollars. For the amateur and beginners such as Becky you can hunt for the bargains and even make pieces on your own.

People of all ages are making a hobby of furnishing doll houses. Stores are popping up all over the country to sell doll house furniture and furnishings. Anything from the kitchen sink to the plants hanging over it can be bought for doll houses. Hamilton has rugs out of cross-stitch and weaving for her house. She bought a kitchen stove for her very first piece of furniture. "She said I had to furnish my doll house with Victorian furniture with accents including a few antiques, I got an antique looking black wood stove as my first piece of furniture."

Hamilton has collected lamps, chairs, tables, rugs and even plants from all over the United States. "You have to just look for bargains and add pieces of furniture. I have collected furniture all the way from Washington, D.C. to Knoxville, Tennessee. The bigger pieces of furniture get to be more expensive but collectors of doll house furniture are usually not in there to have a party. These people are tired, pressured for time or simply in a bad mood just because they have to be there.

Many auctions are now held at regular furniture auctions for doll house furniture too. Many fairs and craft shows have begun to have displays of peoples' doll houses, and there is a big trade at many of these. This hobby seems to be growing everyday.

When one house is filled up, many begin decorating another one, maybe in an en suite style, and plan to finish this one or this one or this one. After I finish this one I am planning on purchasing a larger one and then I will have a guest house and a real house.

Hamilton's dream piece of furniture is a piano with real ivory keys and a piano stool with a real velvet seat. When I get these I will feel that I have one of the most important pieces of furniture for my house. Then I can begin working on another one," she said.

Hamilton also enjoys buying decorations for different seasons and holidays for her miniature collection. "I have miniature Easter baskets and also a Christmas tree with all the decorations. I made hand wrapped packages to fit under the tree," Hamilton said.

This hobby can really be interesting and is enjoyed by many people. For more information on doll house furniture and doll house collecting simply contact one of your local toy stores. Tourist towns such as Myrtle Beach, Gatlinburg, and New Orleans are all great hunting grounds for the miniature collector. Small shops also are loaded with many things for these houses.

Librarians hear it all from A to Z
By KIM ODOM
TJ staff writer

There had always been a rumor that one of the most boring jobs someone could have was to be a librarian. You work in a place where it is always quiet and where most of the people who come into the library are usually not in there to have a party. These people are tired, pressured for time or simply in a bad mood just because they have to be there.

One librarian from the Winthrop Library however, seems to feel that working in the library isn't quite as bad as everyone makes it out to be. Loren Estes, a senior elementary education major, has some really bizarre stories about the Winthrop Library. "Out of all the jobs that I have to do in the library I have to say that the most interesting and the most entertaining thing about my job is listening to the crazy excuses that college students can give us concerning their overdue books.

"We have had excuses that are sometimes so bizarre that we cannot see how they were ever thought up," Estes said. My dog chewed it up is one of the most frequently used. There must be a dog in every dorm room on books daily. If you do not believe this then one year through that monster. What a shame.

"We also have a number of slack workers in the library that forget to put the due date stickers on the books, but yet there is always a good story about looking around or that broken looking place or a small tear on the back page where it should have been put.

One of the best excuses ever received turned out later to be true. "This excuse was so weird we knew that it could not have possibly been a lie," laughed Estes.

One student came up with this story. "My mother was taking my books back, and she thought she came from the Charlotte library instead of Winthrop's. Before I found this out and went to get them back, the other library had closed up and the1200 asbestos hazards. This stopped them all but like the story goes, "The truth can sometimes be unbelievable." We found this out two months later when the library was reopened.

Star Wars, the Union Carbide disaster in Bhopal, and the Iran/Iraq war were some important issues discussed at Winthrop's tenth annual Model United Nations.

According to Secretary General Ashley Byrd, Winthrop's conference is realistic.

"The conference really inspired me. We followed closely the rules of the real U.N. We've sent delegations to Harvard and the problems of one country delegations to Harvard and are the problems of all," Wilker- Princeton, and ours is more so.

Luigen added that he was excited that he was able to get the book on India. "They are in fashion merchandising, "Why would they want a book on India?" she said. A number of books also get dropped into the bottomless overnight drop. "We seem to lose about ten or twenty books each year through that monster. What a shame.

"We also have a number of slack workers in the library that forget to put the due date stickers on the books, but yet there is always a good story about looking around or that broken looking place or a small tear on the back page where it should have been put.

Annual dinner honors students
By BRYAN ROBERTSON
TJ assistant news editor

The annual Winthrop College Honors and Awards Dinner was held Wednesday, April 17, in McBryde Cafeteria.

Presiding over the ceremonies was Dr. Michael Smith, Vice President for Academic Affairs and Dean of the Faculty. The address was given by Dr. Anthony J. Lerro, the 1984 Distinguished Professor.

Following the dinner, Dr. Smith acknowledged students who were given the Winthrop President's List and the Dean's List for the past two semesters. Afterwards, the dean of each department announced the recipients of scholarships and awards. Both Smith and Dean Jeff presented Winthrop College Awards. Cathy Cooper received the "Fred K. and Ruby Hippew- ership Scholarship Fund," comment, "I'm very honored to have received the award. I was shocked!"

Entertainment was provided by the Winthrop Jazz Ensemble under the direction of David Franklin.
Let’s be careful

By LISA BUDE
TJ news editor

It’s 2 a.m. on a Friday night. The air is warm and humid. Empty shells of tall classroom buildings loom over grey sidewalks. Behind the hedge, he crouches in wait for the next co-ed walking home alone. Don’t be that student!

It used to be that students were relatively carefree. They took solitary midnight strolls, slept in unlocked rooms, and left keys on top of door ledges. After all they thought, rapes and assaults only happen to other people, and isn’t it Public Safety’s responsibility to protect students?

Although Chief Williams and his officers make every effort to assure students, faculty and staff of a safe and secure environment, they are only human. Even if someone was assigned to each student 24 hours a day, accidents would inevitably occur.

This is why it is up to students to use good judgment and caution—especially at night. Students should look out for each other. Use the buddy system. Always travel in groups. If you need to go out at night, ask a friend to accompany you. The saying “Friends don’t let friends drive drunk” also holds true for “Friends don’t let friends walk alone.”

If all else fails, call Public Safety. Although they should not be used as a taxi service, they would rather send an officer to come get you if you really need it than have to send someone to investigate because the worst happened. Students should also keep their doors locked and take keys with them. Keeping keys on top of door ledges. After all they thought, rapes and assaults only happen to other people, and isn’t it Public Safety’s responsibility to protect students?

It is extremely unfortunate that it takes incidents such as these to make people aware of their own safety.

Although this editorial is not intended to make students afraid of their own shadows, it is being written to urge them to use caution and common sense to help prevent violence. Let’s be careful out there. The Johnsonian cares about you!

Encounter with Public Safety

By MONNIE WHITSON
TJ news editor

Last Wednesday at 11:30 p.m. while my roommate and I were diligently studying, we suddenly had a milkshake attack and decided to run out to Burger King and fulfill our needs. On returning to “the Pit” we discovered no available parking spaces. “Well - I guess we’ll have to park at Dinkins again!” my roommate commented, “but let’s go by Public safety and ask if they would follow us over there and then give us a ride back to the dorm.” So we drove to public safety and asked if they’d comply with our wishes. After we described our car, they said an officer would retrieve us in a few minutes.

As we were pulling into the drive at Dinkins, however, our reliable motor vehicle jolted, puttered, and took one last breath before ascending to the big car lot in the sky. Then within a few seconds, public safety arrived. The officer pushed a button behind us, waited briefly, and then sped on around us to find his two female students who called in earlier for an escort. But wait - aren’t we those two female students who called in earlier for an escort? Anyway we proceeded to turn on our hazards - so that maybe he would get the picture and help us.

Well - the officer didn’t get the hint - and continued to wait for the two students in their silver 1974 Toyota that we accurately described.

I was becoming a little disturbed and my roommate got this real mean look in her eyes. I decided then to walk to the officer’s car and vocalize our problem. “Hi - you were supposed to pick us up and take us back to our dorm, but our car broke down as we were pulling in.” I said casually. He stared up at me with blank eyes - and an empty look on his face. Then I continued, “Well we could tow it, but I think it’s too late to call for a truck - maybe we could push it to the side or something.” He scanned the parking lot - then turned to me and said sarcastically “well, what do you want me to do about it.” “Uh-uh - well maybe you could help us or something.” I replied. “Okay, let me pull around and take a look at it.”

Anyway to make a long story short, we were pretty upset about the whole occurrence. We felt that he didn’t care to help us out - two stranded females - now 12 p.m. - who were prime targets for another rape incident. We, my roommate that is, expressed her views very decoratively. In other words - she got off on him bad! He responded in saying that he was not a mechanic and that students should help themselves first - then they’d do all they could to help them. I can understand that I really can. We shouldn’t take them for a taxi service - but let’s get real! We had a problem and needed a little assistance, you know?

After the officer helped us push our immobilized vehicle into a parking space he deposited us off at Wofford. We thanked him for his assistance and then apologized for our “vocal abuse.”

He replied that public safety does want to help students in any way possible. We stressed our appreciation, but emphasized that he didn’t seem to care about the situation.

I want to conclude by saying that public safety is doing a good job on campus - minus a few complaints. Public safety is essential on campus - they have their responsibilities, and I commend them. But, public safety should be concerned about us - the students even though the problem is a minor one, like the one we encountered last week. This is really just a cute summary of our experience with public safety. It is by no means a vindictive attack on the officer or the entire department. I appreciate you being here - but I wish the officer would have been a little more polite.

The English language is silly

By MARK WOOD
TJ contributing editor

While walking out in front of Sims building one night last week, I noticed a very interesting sign. The sign said "Stop for Pedestrians in Crosswalk." It amazed me to discover that the officials at this fine school would ever express their animosity in such a blunt way. With this one simple little sign, Winthrop College has declared open season on Jay-walkers! When you get right down to it, this sign actually does imply that one needn't stop for those students not in the crosswalk. But I'm sure that wasn't the intended purpose of the sign.

Actually this little sign is just another example of how silly the English language is. Ours is probably the only language in which a person can say one thing, and one hundred other people can interpret it one hundred different ways. Not only that, but what we say often makes no real sense at all; yet other people understand us. How many times have you heard someone say, "It's the same difference?" This phrase has always bothered me because how can two things that are different be the same? Yet this phrase is used to imply that two or more things are basically alike. Or how about this classic: "I'm going to pick up a few things at the store." Now just imagine what might happen if you had a foreign guest staying in your house and you asked him to "go down to the store and pick up a few things." What is this guy going to do? Is he going to go to the store and "pick up" the things, stand there awhile, and put them back? Or is he going to go in and take what he wants and leave without paying for them? It's beyond me!

The English language also sports many more common expression. How many times have you heard someone say that they were going to "catch a plane"? Now the very thought of catching such a tremendous vehicle is nothing short of absurd. Or how about all of those people who tell you to "get on the bus"? Well, thank you folks, but personally I prefer to get "in" the bus. And one of my all-time favorites is the word "Hysterectomy." Now to my knowledge this operation has never been performed on a man, so I'm strongly in favor of changing this word from hysterectomy to "hysterectomy." Well, that's rational, isn't it?

Can you imagine what the world would be like if we all began doing exactly what we were told? Maybe if you had something that belonged to your roommate he or she might say "Put that up!" Imagine how silly you would look holding whatever you had high in the air. Or what if your mother told you to call Aunt Edna on the phone. You'd look pretty stupid standing on the phone and yelling "Aunt Edna!" at the top of your lungs.

All of these examples seem pretty stupid, I know. But there is one example left that tops them all. How many of you out there have ever written one of your friends or relatives a letter? Well, you told you to call Aunt Edna on the phone. You'd look pretty stupid standing on the phone and yelling "Aunt Edna!" at the top of your lungs.

Anyway, you may ask your self as I did, "I wonder what happened to all of those benches?" Well, the other day I was walking home from class, I noticed a slew of white benches in President Lader's backyard. On closer examination, I realized that the green benches had been cunningly painted white. Several of them displayed small green specks where the white paint had chipped off.

In stoic disbelief I counted TWELVE benches right in Mr. Lader's back yard! I then walked all the way around campus to see how many benches were on or whoever else cared to use them. Unfortunately though, they seem to have disappeared. Admittingly, the President so that anyone wanting to sit and his men by all means deserve around on campus has to sit on the public part of campus and the ground with the ants, of the campus' benches, but it seems evident that the 3000 desirables.

Now that it's getting warm outside again, it would be really nice to be able to lounge around on campus studying, leg-watching or whatever, but without the benches it is just not very convenient to do so. Bummer. Anyway, you may ask yourself as I did, "I wonder what happened to all of those benches?"

With all mutual sincerity,

Baseball team ranked seventh

By JEFF RUBLE
TJ sports writer

The Winthrop Eagle baseball team, ranked seventh in the nation, is playing extremely well down the stretch and the team is aiming high as tournament rolls around.

The Eagles, playing almost every day, are presently 33-7. This past Saturday on the road, Winthrop defeated USC-Aiken, currently ranked fourth in the nation, by a tight score of 5-4. The team followed this performance with a 15-1 shellacking of Morris College.

The amount of success this season has been quite unexpected, Head Coach Horace Turbeville reflected, "At the start of the season I considered this a rebuilding year, but young players have come through so well that we've won a lot of games that we weren't expected to win." Turbeville cited several players for their fine play. "The young guys on the pitching staff are doing a great job and Scott Gaines, Art Inabinet and Jeff Dodig are all big difference. I encourage everyone to come out and support the team, especially since it's getting warm."

All this success has led to high expectations with the Big South Tournament approaching. Turbeville feels that the Big South Tournament will probably come down to Winthrop, UNC-Asheville and the host team, Campbell College, vying for the title. Turbeville stated, "I think we are approaching the switch to NCAA classification in a positive way, and I am excited that we are going to be competing at a higher level."

The key match ups for the rest of the season should be the district games and the tournaments. The District Six tournament is May 3-5 at Riley Park in Sumter, S.C. and the Big South tournament is May 13-15 at Campbell College in Buies Creek, N.C.

Runners practice year round

By TODD HUTCHINSON
TJ sports writer

Cross country season is over, but according to Coach Charlie Bowers, the team is still working hard and recruiting is underway.

Winthrop has signed one more runner to add to the team. Eric Fearn, a cross country/track runner from Woodside High School, has signed to run for the Eagles. Fearn brings an impressive high school record to Winthrop. Last year he finished 2nd in the state in cross country while earning All-State and All-Region honors.

Coach Bowers feels Fearn will add immediate help to the Eagles. Bowers said, "Eric comes to Winthrop from a quality program at Mauldin. His team ended the season as state runners-up. They have a good reputation and we are working on recruiting our own runners."

As far as other recruits, Bowers said things are going slow. "It's too early in the track season to have an idea of what kind of recruits we will get. Because we don't have a track program we have to concentrate on getting "pure" distance runners. By that I mean people who will run cross-country in the fall and road races in the spring."

Bowers also added things are slow in way of putting out good distance runners but said he is in touch with several prospects in the Carolinas.

Besides Bowers the Eagle runners have gained valuable coaching from assistant Coach Glenn Sparrow. Sparrow, a former All-American at North Carolina, has many promising things to say about his first year of coaching. "This year has been a good learning experience for me. Coach Bowers has been a big influence on me and I have a lot of work and pride into running this season," said Sparrow.

After attending an established program at UNC, Sparrow had this to say about Winthrop's first season. "It's a bit unfair that foundation was laid down for next year and future years to come."
Nurse James retires after 25 years

By FELICIA DIXON
Special to TJ

Approximately 25 years ago, Anne S. James who is presently Supervisor of Nurses in the Crawford Health Center came to Winthrop after being asked to come by the 1959 influenza epidemic. She and her husband, Dr. Isaac Grabiel, came to Winthrop College from the Margaret Nance dormitory in Monroe, N.C., where she worked as a registered nurse. She retired after 25 years of service.

At the time, Crawford was not a clinic. It was an entire hospital and all rooms on both floors were used. James said, “I remember every bed on both floors and the entire first wing of the Margaret Nance dormitory was being used to bed the students who had the flu.”

In 1965, Grabiel was succeeded by Dr. Johnson. Dr. Johnson was a good doctor, but she had personal problems. She started the drug room where the students could pick up their prescription medicine. However, Johnson was only at Winthrop for about two or three years. Next, Dr. Bea Gatling came to Winthrop. “She had a genuine interest in the students, and she started the birth control pill program,” James stated.

One afternoon each week, Gatling would only see students interested in contraception. In 1976, the hospital was reduced to a clinic. At that time, Gatling left Winthrop because she really wanted to work in a teaching hospital. John James, a retired professor of Winthrop University, said, “I went to the Human Resources Department and they asked me to go to Charlotte where I worked for two years and got married.”

While Dr. Gatling was at Winthrop, James had a faculty position in the College of Nursing. “I had a lot of administrative duties,” she stated.

Three years ago on April 22, James suffered a heart attack and was admitted to a hospital in Rock Hill for a week, then they sent her to Charlotte where she had two by-pass open heart surgeries. “When you have a heart attack, it can be very stressful,” she said. The stroke left her with a severe speech impediment. “I went to the Human Development Center here on campus, and they had to teach me how to talk again.”

“Have lost a lot of help from my family, my husband, daughter, and two sons,” she recalled. “With their help, she was able to return to work in January 1985 after having been drafted by the U.S. Navy. Her youngest son earned his degree at Erskine College.

When James started her career here at Winthrop, she had a staff of nine nurses, and today it’s down to three of which two are part time. Her most unique experience in 25 years was caring for two students who had spinal meningitis. That was when Dr. Albertson was here and we took care of them here on campus,” she said.

Now after 25 years, Nurse James is turning over her responsibility to someone else. “I am going to retire on May 3, 1985, and I will retire along with her husband Professor John James of the History Department here at Winthrop. When asked what her retirement plans were, James replied, “We’re gonna’ travel and do whatever we want to do.”

Winthrop’s Greeks celebrate

Winthrop College fraternities and sororities celebrated “Greek Week” April 8-12. Special events took place to promote Greek fellowship.

Cristina Grabel, assistant dean of students, was in charge of the week’s festivities. “I think the students did an excellent job and I was extremely pleased,” Grabel said. Georanne Pratt, Terry Grayson, Tammy Knox, Lane Bembeneck, Randy Bagley, Tiwana Gladman, and Andre Isaac assisted Grabel during the week.

According to Georanne Pratt, the staff met occasionally up until a few weeks before Greek Week. At that point we began to get things together.

Extra measures were taken to eliminate the possibility of arguments that have arisen during past years.

Monday night, April 8, a “Greek Sing” competition was held. The winning fraternities were Pi Kappa Alpha and Delta Sigma Theta, and Zeta Alpha was runner-up. The winning sorority was Zeta Phi Beta won for the second year in a row.

Tuesday, April 9, was Jersey Day. Nightly featured an Egg Drop and a Tug of War. Sigma Phi Epsilon was the overall winner among fraternities, with Pi Kappa Alpha a close second. Among sororities, Zeta Tau Alpha was the overall winner, with Chi Omega placing second.

On Thursday night, a banquet was held in the cafeteria in honor of the winners of the competitions for both the week and the year. Awards were also given to the best advisors. The winners were Kappa Alpha’s Jim Johnston and Delta Sigma Theta’s Cynthia Roddy.

On Friday night, a dance was held in the cafeteria in honor of the winners of the competitions for both the week and the year. Awards were also given to the best advisors. The winners were Kappa Alpha’s Jim Johnston and Delta Sigma Theta’s Cynthia Roddy.

Fraternity houses offer...

And in underneath the bathroom door, all truth appear to resemble that Billy Graham would appear.

Sometimes these houses are beach resorts or used car dealerships. But in reality, they are the mistaken for places of study. And believe it or not, more can usually be accomplished in the houses, then the gossipy building called a library. The only problems encountered with this task are the hours at which they are performed. The recommended times usually fall in between happy hour and late night, after the SEVEN-ELEVEN crowd has gone to bed. Weekend studying is usually prohibited in all houses, along with missing specials because of minor events such as major tests.

Parties at these houses are a pretty common occurrence and sometimes lead to unexpected surprises, such as joyriding in ambulances to mysterious warbroke disappearances. But say they, “never a dull moment.”

All in all, fraternal households could be classified as experimental living at its best. The main rules in these houses are, rule number one, “there are no rules” and rule number two, “don’t break rule number one.” But among all, the adversity that they somehow maintain sanity and actually get along with each other. As far as copying goes, the word obviously originated in these houses. But experimental,

After a hard day of Monday class, students usually call for a disc jockey. But not Chezanne Taylor, a 21-year-old senior from Meadows of Dan, Va. At 6 p.m. she transforms from student to disc jockey. Taylor is the host of the Winthrop College radio station, WCRO, on 840 AM, every Monday night from 6 until 10:30 p.m. Being a disc jockey is not an easy task, according to Taylor. "There is no preparation for the program you just wing it. You do not get to prepare the program out.
just add the entire program.
You have to figure out what you are going to say and concentrate."

Taylor has been the disc jockey for WCRO on Monday nights since last August. She takes her job seriously by submitting a demonstration tape auditioned by Buddy Fields. The tape consists of shortened segments of what one would be required to do on a program, such as introducing the song, the campus news, weather, etc.

"For the program you have to do everything yourself, there is no newscaster or weatherman to do it for you," Taylor explained.
The station obtains the news releases from the Winthrop College Public Relations Office.

The disc jockey chooses the music only when there are no requests. The request line (No.
213-0135) is open all night long and is generally very active. Students who wish to request a song are always welcome. The station is on the air from 4:30 p.m. until 11:55 p.m. Monday through Saturday and Friday night through 11 p.m. during the time before and after the disc jockey. The station phrase is,

Frat slide and close on campuses

MINOT, ND (CPS)—While most fraternities and sororities and the country are full to capacity, the boom seems to be just beginning on some campuses.

Some observers predict the still-inflated Greek activity, poin ting to changing student trends and financial aid woes as evidence.

But others say it's wrong to read much into the failures, and that the affected campuses simply haven't caught on to the growth trend yet.

At Minot State College, for example, Nu Sigma Tau closed down for financial reasons, leaving just one frat and three sororities—with a total membership declined in the last four years.

A number of other colleges,
reseaching the University of Minnesota and Penn State, among others, also are seeing their greek populations wane somewhat.

"Greek participation is down even for two houses," Cox reports. "In the past two years our membership has been very low, and it's been edging down for the last four years."

"Everyone else, frats and sororities are gaining members," laments Tim Ross of Delta Chi, Minnesota State's remaining fraternity. "We're wiping out some houses.

Ross blames the decline on a "change in attitudes from Greek life, and what students perceive as the high financial cost of joining up.

Supreme Court helps campus gays

WASHINGTON, D.C. (CPS)—Gay
students around the country got more legal help last week in fighting colleges that won't recognize their clubs.

By refusing to intervene, U.S.
Supreme Court justices let stand a federal appeals court ruling that Texas A&M University's refusal to recognize a student gay group constitutes unconstitutional discrimination.

The ruling, issued last year, was the fourth of its kind from a federal appeals court.

Combined with similar rulings
by the Florida and Oklahoma courts in 1982, gay activists believe they now have the legal weapons to force administrators to recognize their groups as bona fide student organizations.

Levi says, "We had 10 years of legal precedents, all on our side, but that doesn't mean that people are going to toe the line."

"It's still not an easy battle, but it's easier than it used to be," he says.

Georgetown, Texas Tech, and Southern Methodist universities are pending the Institute which refuse to grant student gay groups recognition on other student organizations.

Improve your study skills

By VIOLETTA WESTON

To TJ staff writer

With two weeks left in the semester, you may think it's too late to improve your study habits. According to Dee Hamilton, student counselor at Eastern's Counseling Center, "it's almost never too late. The best thing to do though, is to start good study habits at the beginning of the semester."

"The most common problems students have are time-management and test-taking skills," said Hamilton. "Setting up a weekly schedule will help students organize time for recreation, studying, work, etc."

She added, Hamilton suggests, "start early, it makes a difference."

Research has shown the average college students' attention span is approximately fifty minutes. When you study, study for as long as possible, then take a five minute physical break, such as walking, then resume studying. Also, when you study, get rid of any problems or stress until later.

Other tips that will help during exam week and following semesters are exercising, eating right, and getting plenty of sleep. It also helps to study with another student. By having a study mate, you can concentrate on facts you don't know and this will enable you to do better on tests.

Never cram for tests, take "No-Doz", or live on a coffee-only diet. This will almost always impair your performance on tests.

"Before taking a test, give yourself some positive reinforcement," says Hamilton. "Don't dwell on how much you should have studied. A good attitude helps during a test," she added.

When taking a test, look it over before you do anything. Do what you know first, do what you are somewhat familiar with second, and do the most difficult parts last. Manage your time so that you can check your test before turning it in.

For more information on improving your study habits stop by the Counseling Center in Crawford Building between 8:30 a.m. and 5:00 p.m. or call no. 2253.
