ASKS ARREST OF MAN "WHO READ HER MIND"

Newark, N. J., Dec. 3.—Because a man has been able to read her mind accurately and to anticipate everything she does or thinks, Mrs. Fallette Walsh appeared in the First Precinct Police Court and asked that he be arrested.

MAN IS ROBBED WHILE HE REPORTS THEFT TO POLICE

Los Angeles, Dec. 3.—L. M. Henderson of 25 Sixth street, reported to the desk sergeant at the Los Angeles Harbor Police Station the theft of a hatbox and contents valued at $125, from his automobile, parked at Wall and Beacon streets, Los Angeles Harbor.

A description of the property was duly recorded and Henderson departed. In a short time he returned.

"So you have found it?" pleasantly asked the sergeant.

"I'll say not," replied the man. "Some one stole another bag from my car while I was in here."

JUDGE RULES BATH AIN'T REG'LAR ROOM

Youngstown, Ohio, Dec. 3.—A bathroom is not a room. Not in Ohio. So a Youngstown judge has recently ruled. The decision will be of more than lexicographical interest to members of the National Association of Real Estate Boards who are concerned with building restrictions.

A permanent injunction based on the ruling was granted to restrain a lot-owner from erecting a five-room-and-bath house on a lot restricted to a six-room house.

"You can't sell sentiment in Washington" cried a sweating auctioneer as he knuckled down for $45 a mahogany sofa, two armchairs and one other chair—all upholstered in velvet. The furniture was formerly the property of Warren G. Harding.

Before the earthquake the Japanese Government had allotted $110,000 to the "Social Affairs Bureau" to encourage Japanese emigrants to go to Brazil. More than 100 local intelligence offices in different parts of Japan promoted the movement.

QUITTING THE SOIL

Georgia, like other agricultural states, has suffered a steady movement of young men away from the farms. In all sections of the country they are quitting the soil for the more lucrative positions of the small towns and the cities. In Missouri a survey recently completed showed that in one year 47,000 had deserted the farms for other work. During that period were found to have taken the places left vacant.

The reason for this desertion of Missouri farms—which occurrence may be noted in any agricultural region in larger or lesser degree—has been given, and while it is an interesting analysis of this serious economic development, it is not so important as the result it has produced. It was explained that the 47,000 who left the farms were young men, most of them single, but a great many of them married. They had gone because industry called. And that was a natural thing too. Higher wages, shorter hours, and in some instances, according to the survey, better working conditions conspired to take the country youths into the urban communities. To this was added the desire of the young men to become a part of the activities—social as well as industrial—of the larger towns and cities. The young men might express themselves as doing better than they were doing. Most of them might be depended upon to agree that "a fellow never gets anywhere sticking around on the farm."

Some of the 47,000 will succeed in their changed environment. Others will fail, and still others will drift back to the farm in time. Growing families and the greater demands these will make stiff competition, higher living costs and the wearing of the new monoclonity will influence many to wend their way countryward, glad of the fact that the rural regions still exist. Notwithstanding that, this will not prevent other youths, as they grow up, from having the same desires. They, too, will feel the urge to get somewhere, and "they will go. It is an endless chain of human activity because it is an endless game of human desire and thought.

But what to do on the farm is the question to be answered now as it will be the question of the future. Farmers everywhere are trying to adjust themselves to the new conditions. Here in Georgia some are shifting cotton fields to other crops that require less labor, or at least less man power. Others are employing more farm machinery. More attention is being given to fruit, nuts, dairying and stock and poultry raising, all of which means greater independence and increased prosperity on the farm.—Selected.
