EDITH GORMAN AT NATIONAL MEETING

Dr. D. L. Marsh, President of Boston University, Addresses Group

Edith Gorman, President of the Student Government Association, Represented Winthrop College at the Annual Meeting of the National Student Federation of America in the Parker House at Boston, Mass., December 28 to January 1.

Since the purpose of the Federation is to mold student opinion and to ameliorate all phases of campus activity, the program consisted mainly of open forums where discussion touched on questions of college publications, courses of study, and the problem of military training, national events in relation to schools and students, and the problems of student government, and overviews of the progress of specific student governments.

Among the speakers at the conference were Dr. D. L. Marsh, president of Boston University, and Dr. E. H. MacCraw, president of Vassar. The National Student Federation of America is a permanent organization. It was organized in 1929 at Princeton University. Since that time it has grown to include 160 colleges in its membership, representing nearly every state in the Union.

The conference sponsored by the Federation is held annually. Boston University was host this year; next year the convention will meet in Kansas City. The 200 delegates at the conference this year represented 46 states. One delegate, Dennis Polows of the University of Nottingham, England, was a representative of a similar European Federation, the C. I. E.

The conference decided to send an American delegate to the European conference this year.

Three South Carolina colleges were represented at this conference: Furman, Converse, and Winthrop. Although Winthrop is not a member of the Federation, an "observer delegate" for the past three years has represented the college at the Federation meeting.

PEABODY PRESIDENT DELIVERS ADDRESS

Dr. Bruce Payne Treats History of Education For Women

WINTHROP PAYS TRIBUTE TO DAVID BANCROFT JOHNSON, FIRST PRESIDENT

Dr. Bruce R. Payne, President of George Peabody College for Teachers at Nashville, Tennessee, delivered the Founder's Day address, Thursday morning, January 10, in the Main Auditorium, honoring David Bancroft Johnson, the Founder and First President of Winthrop College.

Dr. Shelton Phelps presided at the service, and Dr. James P. Kinard introduced Dr. Payne. The order of exercises included the following: Proclamation, March Pencilcase; Hymn; Invocation by the Reverend Mr. J. W. Shackford. Scriptures Reading by the Reverend Mr. P. Peyton.

Paula XXXIII by Schubert sung by the Winthrop College Chapel Choir. Address by Dr. Bruce R. Payne. Recessional March by Dave Becker. Exercises at Grave. Praying of Vespers.

Education for Women. In making the address on the education of women, Dr. Payne began: "The terribly discouraging and pro-longed struggle of women for the opportunities and advantages of higher learning is the first and most impressive fact facing one who studies that subject."

"Even in 1890, there were enrolled in universities, colleges, and normal schools in America only 53,168 women."

"When the first chartered college for women in the world (Wellesley) was established in Georgia, a little before the Civil War, it was foreclosed and sold for $10,000."

"The opposition to financing this college was crystallized in the sentence: 'Will the study of comic satires and spherical trigonometry aid a woman in making a pudding or in performing any other household duty?'"

"One said, 'No, I will not give you a dollar. All that a woman needs to know is how to read the New Testament, and to spin and weave clothing for her family.'"

"Another man said: 'I will not give you a cent for any such purpose. I would not have one of your graduates for a wife, for I could never build even a pig-pen without her criticizing it, and saying that it was not put up on mathematical principles.'"

THE LENGTHENED SHADOW OF THE MAN

We set aside one day each year as a memorial to the founder and first president of Winthrop College, David Bancroft Johnson. Although we have chosen one particular time in which to pay a tribute of respect and admiration to the man who did more for the education of women in South Carolina than any one else ever has or perhaps ever will, we feel that the College stands throughout the year as a memorial to his life and work. There are tangible things hereabout which serve as constant reminders: the fact that Johnson Hall and Bancroft Dormitory both bear his name; the fact that every building on the campus includes his portrait, often with a quotation from him; the fact that even The Johnsonian itself is a memorial.

Besides these things which we can see and know, however, there are intangible reminders of him. The whole spirit of Winthrop College—a democratic school for the education of the young womanhood of the State—is strangely significant of the man himself; the respect which South Carolinians have for Winthrop is almost a monument.

We feel, therefore, that it is fitting that we pause each year for one day to pay tribute to David Bancroft Johnson, a man who still lives in the great work which he accomplished. Emerson might well have said about him, "The institution is but the lengthened shadow of the man."

"LET'S GIVE THREE CHEERS"

Too often, perhaps, the function of an editorial is to criticize; yet commendation likewise lies within its forte. The Johnsonian has noticed an attitude upon which we should like to comment most favorably. The prevalent belief is that real school spirit exists only when one can gallop down the field with a pigskin tucked under one arm to win a touchdown for dear old Alpm. Mater or else when one can sit on the sidelines and cheer the hero on.

As far as Winthrop is concerned, we think that this theory is blasted. The Johnsonian has observed this year particularly that the wholehearted school loyalty of the college personnel is most evident, and we would like to commend it highly. Every college-wide activity that the administration has sponsored has been loyally backed by the whole student body. The faculty and officers have supported us "to the last ditch" and have aided us in carrying to fulfillment plans for making college life more vital. Heads of organizations report that they have never worked with a group of girls more cooperative or more eager to make that particular organization a credit to Winthrop.

TO ENROLL OR NOT TO ENROLL

January is the month of taking stock and making resolves for a better record; it is quite apropos that this month should be the time of enrollment for the new semester. A new enrollment means a new chance for every student, and now is the time to start that improvement which you are determined to make, not in April or June. "A last minute runner may get to the goal in the end, but he is in pretty bad shape when all is over."

This new semester begins with an enrollment of all students, Wednesday, January 16, at which time each student is at liberty to select the courses she most desires and to sign for them. We should begin now to think through our prospective schedules and should try to evaluate the merits of each course which we select. We are inclined to choose courses because they are "crisps," or because the professor is known to be rather lenient; whereas we should really choose that particular course because of interest in its subject matter and of its intrinsic value. We shall never regret those courses which we have chosen because of interest and personal value; but nine chances out of ten, we shall regret every so called "crisp" which we have taken.

Often we are inclined to register for a course because it comes at a convenient hour. Especially in physical education, we wait till we have matriculated in everything else and then take any physical ed we can find which fits into our schedule. Everyone should know how to swim for example, and yet there are only a few of us who take swimming for recreation and enjoyment. Each of us should learn some team game, some individual game which may become a hobby, and some rhythm. We should take all these points into consideration before we recklessly say, "Give me a physical ed third hour Monday!"

Before registration day, let's do some serious thinking and let's sign up for courses which will be of lasting benefit.

Three hundred Italian university students are in this country this fall on a tour of American colleges and universities. Now that Henry Long has been handed out bills, may we suggest a change on the tour of American colleges and universities. Now that Henry Long has been handed out bills, may we suggest a change on the tour of American colleges and universities.

WINTHROP... WEEK BY WEEK

(With Apologies to McIntyre)

Thingumabobs: Dr. Jerrill says he is now known exclusively as "Neil's Daddy". . . Dr. Johnson spent all her time at the Foreign Language Convention in bed nursing the "flu." What a break! . . . Edith Gorman had better luck at her convention. Have you seen her handsome aviator, in his own plane, if you please, with a huge New York University pennant covering one whole side? He's a student government president, too. . . Alice Outler's diamond has not one—but five, stones. It's beginning to look a trifle serious, we believe. . . The best description we've heard in a long time: Eddie Cantor says, "He had a month big enough to put a duck." It is a grand and glorious feeling to take a cut when you're in the action. . . Things we can do without: People who introduce the speaker as "one who needs no introduction."

Punch or some other magazine says: "Football," they find, was invented in medieval England by soldiers kicking a skull. In this enlightened age, of course, the skull is no longer detached."

And then this sage remark: "Some grumble because they don't get what's coming to 'em; others, because they do."

The Literary Digest remarks: "For a change, our laundry has just sent back some buttons with no shirt on them." If you've seen us lately, you've heard this one, but we like it a lot.

Epigrams: "What would be the proper thing to do in carrying the duck, it should sit off the platter and into your neighbor's lap?"

"Be very courteous. Say 'May I trouble you for that duck?'"

Purely Personal Fiftie: One of our favorite people: Miss Fannie Watkins. . . We glad we were past the hygiene and library methods age with the belated exams. . . Critics have chosen the following as the ten best pictures of the year: The Barrets of Wimpole Street, The House of Rothschild, It Happened One Night, One Night of Love, Little Women, The Thin Man, Viva Villa!, Dinner at Eight, The Count of Monte Cristo, and Berkeley Square. . . We would subtract Viva Villa and Dinner at Eight. . . Time says that at the recent ball given at the White House for the Roosevelts who are now Harvard students, the crabs were "Home in the Range" for the President; "The Blue Danube" for Mrs. Roosevelt; and "The Merry Widow" waltz for Anna. The songs the boys chose were "Stars Fell on Alabama," "June in January," "Frishtion" waltz; "An Barful of Music," "The Ecclesiastical," "Hay As Sweet As You Am," "Two Cigarettes in the Dark," and "You're the Top."

Punch continues: We have nothing to say about that story of an artist who painted a cob-web on the ceiling so realistic that the maid spent hours trying to remove it except that there may have been such an artist, but there never was such a maid. . . And "an octogenarian says that he has worn the same pair of trousers for forty years. Off and on, of course." The epigram of the week in verse:

Wanderer Ago
Last month's marble be forgotten,
We must appear this little note;
That last Spring's field of budding cotton
Is this Fall's all-wood overcoat!
Short shavings: It is now approaching that season of the year when we should like to take advantage of the hearing magazine advertisement: "How I improved my memory in one evening. . . Judge says: "And the turkey at our house couldn't have gone any faster if it had been stream-lined."

"Then there was the college boy who wanted a liberal education, but his father wouldn't let him. Free—all; so long as they trooped in two by twos. He never asked what the poor fellows knew.

And that's the reason, we dare to say, That makes dumb animals dumb to-day.
Old fogey Noah, with his team steers, Set back pedagogy ten thousand years; Had made the conditions wetter in the psychological Zoo of Chai.

The animals will enter one by one. As soon as their intelligence tests are done, Their standings posted on graded lists, By eminent local psychologists, And each assigned to his proper cage By the personnel director will engage.

The monk and the elephant think they're smart, But our pet director will get a heart; He'll make the pedagogues set some store on The poor old jectaan, that worthy moron. And map out courses they're fit to do For him and the laughing hyena, too.

The dumbest beastie will have his chance, His bent to cultivate and enhance. The beaver will enter our building courses, The mole to mining will turn his forces; In dormitories quite up to date Our bears will do nothing but hibernate.

Even the polecat, that roughish elf, Shall feel quite free to express himself. We'll count on the monkey's campus capers To get us publicity in the papers, And keep our names in the public eye; The psychological Zoo of Chai!

BLUE SPECTATOR

Mr. Blue Spectator is becoming discouraged. Every time he comes around asking for the choicest bits of gossip he is met with a startling answer, a croupy cough, and an apologetic "I've got such a cold I can't talk" slipped in between the two. . . Did you hear about the young lady who, when leaning against the wall outside the dining room, waiting for the blizzard to be sung, went to sleep and slept through breakfast? . . . And Dr. Keltia has been domesticated by someone, somehow. He scrubbed the desks in the new Debaters League Hall himself. . . Mary Stuart Mills is the picture of dejection. By way of compensation of her dependency she gossips mournfully. "Once I just thought this world was great— Now I know it isn't. 'Cause I has gone to where you ain't. And left you where I isn't!"

Have you seen Alice Saff trying to see infamy (that is, the back of her head) in a make up mirror? Just try it. . . Ora Belle wants to know if you can love and hate someone at the same time. Any answers to this perplexing problem will be greatly appreciated—her box number is 456. . . On Sun-Say night Miss George had to remind her front parlor that it was the Sabbath day—consequently she was almost drawn into a scissors game. . . And Winthrop shines with diamonds—diamonds given for Christmas! See how many of your friends were so fortunate. . . A certain red-headed young gentleman from Charleston has been caught up with by the three young Winthrop ladies to whom he writes—none of them knew he wrote to either of the others. . . Did you hear that any club which breaks rushing regulations will be fined one dollar per break and given plenty of publicity in The Johnsonian? . . . Contrary to all reports, Polly McNeill is still single—it was flu (and not a wedding) that kept her away from school. . . Ethel Cole has the funniest reason yet for not returning on time. . . And Mr. Maggins' speeches are only made once in a life time.

A cultured mind not only appraises judiciously, but also delights in things true, just, lovely, and honorable.—Rev. Henry Biscane Coffin.

WINTHROP'S FOUNDER IS HONORED TODAY

 "Men were thousands of years admitting that women were capable of education."
 "They were brilliant protagonists for the theories of equal intellectual capacity, but it didn't suit our pioneer ancestors to emancipate women."
 "No opponent was ever able to answer Daniel Defoe's announcement: 'I cannot think that God Almighty would create them with souls capable of the same accomplishments with men, and all to be only stewards of our houses, ovens, and stoves.'"

"Ruskin said: 'It is more foolishly wrong to consider that woman is only the shadow and attendant image of her lord. As if he could be helped effectively by a shadow or worldly by a slave.'"
 "The so-called early female colleges themselves were sometimes their own worst enemies. Their curricula indicated that they did not believe women intellectually capable of pursuing serious courses of study. In the ninety-two of these colleges there appear such subjects as spelling, defining, penmanship, reading, mental arithmetic, written arithmetic, 'songs of Zion,' etc. But worse than all, under parsing and grammar we find such subjects as 'Milton's Paradise Lost' and 'two or three of Shakespeare's plays (Imagines parsing Milton and Shakespeare!'"

Organization of Normal Schools
 Dr. Payne continued, "It has taken us a long time to learn that ignorance no more ornaments a woman than it does a man. The attempt, in no sense universal, to give women the same kind of cultural education were only worthy attempts. The first real opportunity of education came to them after the Civil War when the cry arose throughout the nation: 'What shall we do with the superfluous women?'"

The death of the men of the Civil War left a heavy, fruitful surplus of women on hand. The first answer to this was that women were given work in textile mills and in shops. This change of economic status inaugurated the demand for industrial and vocational schools. Later on normal schools were provided to train the normal element for women who might be called to teach schools.

"An examination of the charters of most of the women's colleges in America discloses that they were first organized as vocational or industrial or normal schools in response to the needs of a certain number of the women after the Civil War. It is noticeable that these vocational subjects required in the charters of the early publicly-supported institutions of higher education for women have never been abandoned. In fact, there has been a revival of these subjects in certain of the leading institutions for the higher education of women in America."

Dr. Payne stated that there had been a revival of culture. "This revival," he said, "has been in the re-education of the men. Culture and the insistent demands of the alumni of institutions who found after graduation that there were certain subjects that they should have had in college that they did not study. For instance, Dr. Dock Campbell of Peabody inquiring of our married women graduates, discovered that if they were in college again they would very materially change the courses they had pursued as students."

"In the early college days of most mature women there was a very limited number of subjects that were supposed to be cultural. But with the advance of science we have added to that list such subjects as chemistry, biology, physics, home economics, psychology, economics, education, studies of animal and plant life, etc."

"There is no subject which needs redefining more than culture. Formerly we thought if a subject were useful or applicable to the world of affairs it was not cultural. But latterly we have learned that whatever assists man in the power of self-enjoyment, self-entertainment, self-culture, intellectual life, spiritual growth, elevation of the laws of God and man, enrichment of one's concept of beauty and truth—for that person is cultural. Liberal education has liberalized our concept of culture."

"We no longer believe that physical discipline is to be found only in the cramped walls of a gymnasium or in the fields of a sports ground. The demand for broader culture for adjusting students to the whole of life may not be escaped by teachers or by institutions of learning hereafter as in the past by individually limiting what one chose to call cultural education, and then nonchalantly eliminating from such a definition the essential efforts of man to conquer his world. Neither the teacher nor the institution of higher learning can longer by an arbitrary dictionary terminology define themselves out of their moral obligation to adjust mankind to all of his environment."

"The whole of life," Dr. Payne declared emphatically, "the total social and physical environment, and not their fragments shall be the content of education in the future and the goal of all human instruction. 'I am come,' said the Great Teacher, 'that they might have life and that they might have it more abundantly.' Quality of instruction."

"The second terrible struggle of women," Dr. Payne stated, "was for the equal quality of instruction as men were receiving."
 "Sixty-five years ago, as a result of the crisis of the Civil War, women began to achieve their economic freedom. Fifteen years ago they achieved their political enfranchisement. Women's rights (by constitutional amendment) in 1920. The Nineteenth Amendment reads: 'The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.'"
 "After Woman Suffrage—What?"
 "We have thought for hundreds of years that men's duties were public and women's duties were private. It has seemed to us to be sufficient to limit the public duties of citizens to men in maintaining, in the advancing, in the state of the state."
 "Many years ago John Ruskin said that woman's duty to the State is to assist in ordering, in comforting, and in the beautiful adornment of the State."
 "As that conception of woman's public duty began to spread," Dr. Payne said, "and as the rights of citizenship were once secured for her, American civilization began rapidly to advance and the universal spread of opportunities of learning first became secured."
 "The ordering of the State, properly interpreted, means all those institutions such as education that bring orderliness to life. What would education for the masses of our people, and particularly for the very young children, have been in America but for the practical working out of the study of orderly guidance in public education by women?"
 "The orderly education is nothing

our schools. Landscape designing and the garden movement have done as much to cultivate our people and bring happiness and joy to the general masses of the population as any other factor."
 "Indeed, even over the radio, has enabled the citizens of America to live through these troublous days, but who believes that these things would have come without the advanced education of women? There is a beautiful spot in the Lake Country of England on top of a high hill, with winding roads leading down in each direction, where Ruskin used to sit and look and live. So great was his enjoyment of the beauty of the landscape that he left a record calling it the most beautiful spot in England, pointing the way to travelers and begging them to stop and enjoy it. One of the obligations of culture is to distribute the appreciation of beauty everywhere. The state owes this to its citizens and the citizens owe this to the state. Ignorance never did this. The limited learning of the state did it. Only the spread of knowledge, the distribution of taste, the universal opportunity for the cultivation of the appreciation of the beautiful among all people have brought about this state of culture."

"Those of us who can think back upon the small in school, the drab lives we lived in the few months of boredom, falsely denominated education, in our childhood days may stand in wonder and devout gratitude for that which the diversification of the course of study, the improvement of instruction, and the spread of culture brought about in the school days of early childhood by these new citizens of the Nineteenth Amendment."

"The future of the struggle of the women in the acquisition and in the application of all learning," claimed Dr. Payne's speech, "is a same diversification of the state. Only the same opportunity to use it as citizens must be offered to women. Otherwise, what is the use? Women must be allowed to study law and medicine and agriculture and commercial education and engineering as well as take training in the manual arts."

"But more than the opportunity to prepare, we have to open the doors of professional and economic life to these new citizens. Not the whim of men but the needs of our human society must dictate what women shall study. The state must not block by limited curricula the great social functioning of women, and the state must not be permitted to deny women the right to use for human betterment and social well-being that wider knowledge once acquired by them. Women's only success as well as their outstanding contribution to the world, has been, as Ruskin said, in the ordering, the comforting, and the beautiful adornment of the commonwealth in which she lives. The next task ahead is the completion, the broadening, and the guiding of the opportunities for women, to use in the measure of their own and the glory of God the gifts which she has so long struggled to polish and to enrich."
