FRIDAY, MARCH 20, 1936

We, the students of Winthrop College, feel that we have experienced a personal loss in the death of our friend and trustee, Mr. W. L. Riley; and extend our deepest sympathy to his family.

THE OLD ORDER CHANGETH

Now that this time of year has rolled around once more, we realize with surprise that we must declare our work on The Johnsonian finished and place it in other hands. We do this reluctantly, because we have come to love the weekly rush of putting the news in print, and the associations which we have formed and must, necessarily, break; but we also relinquish it gladly because we feel that the ideas, which we so enthusiastically introduced last spring have become worn out and old, and because we know that we are leaving it with people who are capable.

First of all we wish to thank the students of Winthrop College for reading our paper, for commenting on it to us, thus helping us to please them. We have written it always with them in mind, and it has been heartening to have their interest and support.

We wish to thank our faculty editor for helping us at all times and in all ways, and second, for understanding us. The knowledge of her sympathy and support has given us the feeling of treading on firm ground.

The Johnsonian staff, both reportorial and business, has contributed invaluable to the maintenance of the paper. Without their untiring efforts, news could not have been written or printed.

Throughout the year we have appreciated the suggestions, criticisms, and, now and then, the words of encouragement that the professors and college officers have given us. And we particularly want to thank Mrs. Hardin and Mrs. Gibson for allowing us to print such matters as we had termed doubtful.

And so we say a little reluctantly that "the old order changeth, yielding place to new" as we place our paper in other hands. We shall watch with interest and sympathy the undertakings of the new staff, and we wish them luck.

FOR REPRESENTATIVE MARSHALS

Ever since there have been Marshals at Winthrop College, they have been selected from among the members of the three Literary Societies on the campus.

In the beginning this standard was set probably because membership in one of the Literary Societies showed an interest in campus life but also because the Literary Societies had a combined membership that was nearly equal to the size of the student body.

With the growth of Winthrop College, however, has come a larger student body, an extended curriculum, and an increase in varying student activities, so that it is no longer true that Literary Societies include a large part of the student body.

They are no longer a representative group of students. Students who are interested in fields other than literary studies join societies and clubs nearer their interests: home economics clubs, commercial clubs, science clubs, athletic clubs, education clubs, etc. These groups are not well-represented in the Literary Societies, and therefore have had no representation in the Marshal line.

So far as the duties of Marshals are concerned, these students are as eligible as any others. No literary work is required of Marshals, yet all the honor of the position is bestowed through membership in a Literary Society.

It is true that a certain scholastic record is a requisite of marshalship, also an interest in campus activities, but these requisites can be met by many girls outside of the Literary Societies. It is true also that this year the Societies have adopted a credit system in which a girl must have a certain number of points to her credit before she is eligible for marshalship; but this system is for the benefit of the Societies rather than for the Marshals so long as the Societies are not representative.

It has been said, too, that to take away the Literary Societies' privilege of having Marshals come from their members will kill those Societies. If that is true, the Societies are living only on that privilege and not on any merit within themselves. We think, however, that that statement is false. Other clubs and societies on the campus are alive and working without such a motive; and the Literary Societies can do likewise. The removal of this privilege, moreover, may coincide with the removal of many dead members from the Societies, students who are willing to enter a Society and pretend an interest a year in order to be eligible for marshalship.

We would like to see a new system of Marshal selection instituted—a system that is more representative of the whole student body, a system that continues to maintain the high standards and builds up the feeling of honor that should come with marshalship.

BLUE SPECTATOR

Speciating hasn't been particularly good this week what with everybody being so busy getting their friends elected to one office or another, but we suppose we might just as well reconcile ourselves to such a state of affairs and spend our spare time praying that some kind souls will have time for a little real gossip during the ensuing month or so of elections. If not this column will probably be conspicuous for its absence.

From all accounts, the Knoxville Convention that all the physical educators attended was a white-gang success. "Beck" Cook got two letters in one day from somebody she met out there. Well, that's what we call making time. . . . Miss Post considered it her duty as a rhapsode to lead "Ellie" King and "Diddie" Burnette off to bed at the unreasonable hour of 10:30 to keep them from filling the four dates they each had made.

When it rains during the night, Hazel Moore has to go upstairs to put her freshman sister's window down. . . . When Annie Rosenblum got up to evade a talk in class the other day everybody was so fascinated with the cute little musical notes on her belt that nobody listened to what she said. . . . It has become a regular occurrence for Ruby Lou Heustess to receive a box of candy from his Sunday-afternoon date. Lucky for her room-mate, we'd say.

Betty Hickson had a date with the piccolo player in the Ballet Russe orchestra. Well, we all can't boast of that, but we did have a good time. . . . One of us asked her how he could go to take a drink. When the girl of whom we asked the information looked rather astounded, he hurriedly said, "Well, could you just tell me where the smoking parlor is?"

One girl (and a senior, at that) chose to spend the night in Brazil. . . . Mary Elizabeth Berry, who was accused by her training school pupils of laughing too much, wrote an essay, "In Defense of Laughter," and presented it to her supervisor. How he professes himself mostly in favor of the practice. . . . We know one girl who actually copies love letters from newspapers, books, and other available sources in order to send the daily epistle to her Furman admirer. At that it may be better than making carbon copies to send to different boys, as I hear some girls do. . . . Maryland says she can't help but be suspicious as to the sender of a certain anonymous Valentine, postmarked "Charleston" which she received recently. . . . The story told by Winthrop daughters suggests to the key of the Blue Stocking Key Hole that postmen are not the same everywhere.

Debaters' League Has Discussion Wednesday

"Resolved: That this city should adopt the city-manager plan of government" was the query discussed at a meeting of the Debaters' League, Wednesday, March 14, in Clio Hall, at 4:30.

Coris Hooks and Ellen Alderman were leaders of the government; Louise Johnson and Grace Stucky, of the opposition; and Dimple Thomas and Virginia Walker, of the back-benchers. Clara Pritchard, Athale Carter, and Elmer Chandler were accepted into membership of the League.

STUDENT OPINION

Female Classes—

This year we have been given many privileges that several years ago were not even thought of. These privileges have been abused on every hand. Every day someone, conscious of the fact that she isn't doing exactly the right thing, ill-uses them.

Winthrop is such a large college that, naturally, there must be some restrictions. But to come right down to facts, there really are comparatively few limitations upon pleasures which are reasonable for us to enjoy. It is evident, moreover, that during this year these limitations have been lessened greatly. But if we are to continue to have them, we must not abuse them. It seems that as soon as a privilege is granted us, we immediately begin to hope for "more." Let's recognize and appreciate the amount of freedom we have now; then, in time, gradually the apparently unnecessary restrictions may eventually be eliminated.

Recently an unusual bill has been passed by the senate, and is at present being presented to the faculty for approval. If approved, how will we accept it? Will we conform strictly to its rule or will we neglect our responsibility of complying with its provisions?

Dean U. S. C. Graduate School Speaks Here

"Graduate Work and Graduate Schools" was the subject of the talk made by Dr. Reed Smith, dean of the graduate school of the University of South Carolina, in chapel Wednesday, March 18.

Dr. Smith introduced his talk with a short discussion of the undergraduate curriculum, which he described as a sort of mental gymnastics. It is to the undergraduate who does not spend too much of his time in specializing, a vast panorama of knowledge.

There are, continued Dr. Smith, three great aims or purposes of graduate work. The first is for research; this field is closed to all except the few who have a great deal of time, money, and facilities. The second reason for graduate work is for specialization. The third is to acquire increased professional skill or efficiency.

The speaker named a number of universities which have excellent graduate schools. At the top of the list are Harvard and Michigan, and others are Columbia, Chicago, New York, Princeton, Yale, Wisconsin, and California. Of the schools in the Carolinas the University of North Carolina, Duke, and the University of South Carolina offer recognized degrees.

Dr. Smith concluded by saying that, although graduate work makes one a happier and more useful person, he would not advise it for any except those in the upper quartile in their regular college work. However, if one wishes to increase his professional efficiency, a higher degree is within his grasp and should be worked for.

Freshman Cabinet Sees Beauty Demonstration

Miss Ann Joyner, representative of "Lady Lindsay" facial products, gave a demonstration facial for the Freshman Cabinet Tuesday, March 17, at 4:30, in the Music Room of Johnson Hall.

Miss Joyner, who did this demonstration work at Eitel's Department Store from March 10 to March 15, used as her model Frances Kemp, secretary of the Cabinet. She explained the various processes and offered suggestions to the members as to the type of cosmetics they should use.

After the demonstration, tea, sandwiches, and crackers were served.
