Warning Slips Style Changed; Students Feel Consternation

We are changing our slips—our warning slips. Now they are in three colors, white, blue and pink. One for our master, one for our dame, and one for ourselves—two for ourselves, probably, since the ones that go home always come back. There is something ominously definite about the new forms. They will tell not only that our work is unsatisfactory, but will give the exact grade, and a suggestion as to whether or not to drop the course. We are fast losing our privacy. No longer will we be able to hint that the teacher means our work isn't especially good

DR. JOHN A. MACKAY TALKS TO STUDENTS

Latin America and Phases of Contemporary Life Themes of Speeches

Dr. John A. Mackay, distinguished lecturer and author, spoke on the subject "Latin America—That Other America" in Johnson Hall, Monday afternoon, March 23, at 4:30, and on "Phases of Contemporary Life" at 12:30.

The twenty Latin American republics, Dr. Mackay said in his afternoon speech, may be divided into two groups—those countries resembling Argentina and those resembling Mexico. Argentina, Dr. Mackay declared, is a modern projection of Europe in Latin-America. Argentina, in fact, is a purely white man's country and faces the problem of populating the land. The people are, therefore, hospitable to elements of a foreign race.

Contrasted with Argentina, Mexico is an eruption of aboriginal America in the twentieth century.

Mexico, Dr. Mackay said, might be interpreted by a series of pictures. In the foreground of a picture is a soldier on a horse; in the background, peasants tilling the fields; and near the soldier, a woman teaching six adults and three children. In the address today, Dr. Mackay said, one hears only of the sensational episodes of the Mexican life, and not of the idealism of Mexico expressed in the building of thousands of rural schools.

Another picture, Dr. Mackay said, of Mexico, is a globe, near which stands a noble looking man and over which peers a grotesque monster. This picture is a symbol of Mexico's attitude toward religion.

Dr. Mackay said there was hope in the Mexican situation. The Mexican people are interested—not in a dead crucified Christ, but in the virile Christ who loved little children and fought men out of the temple. The solution of Mexico's problem therefore is in a re-interpretation of Christ by a noble looking man and over which peers a grotesque monster. This picture is a symbol of Mexico's attitude toward religion.

Dr. Mackay spoke on "Four Phases of Contemporary Life" in Johnson Hall, Monday, March 23, at 12:30.

The uncertainty and insecurity of life, Dr. Mackay said, made young people wonder what they can believe in and hold on to. Fed up with the meaninglessness of existence, youth are throwing themselves into the arms of various leaders—Stalin, Hitler, Mussolini, and others. He is disintegrating these young people is "What leader?"

Another phase of contemporary life to be noted, Dr. Mackay said, was the influence of Christ in conflicting old world religions. The forces of centrifugal force are disintegrating these religions and elements of Christianity are entering them.

The only solution of the world's problems, Dr. Mackay said in conclusion, is communities composed of Christians utterly loyal towards God and to their fellow man.

Independence Of Philippines Topic

"Resolved: That the Philippines' independence should be permanent." This is usually considered dangerous. There is a girl in Roddy who is papering her wall with them. Maybe if we all cooperate, we can collect enough for her to finish this semester.

Winthrop, no doubt, is progressing. One month we take off our hats. The next month we change our slips—L. Y.

"Smooth Sailin'" Annual Junior Follies, Promises Evening of Rare Entertainment

"Smooth Sailin'"—a glorious combination of catchy song, hits, snappy dance routines and graceful movement—to be shown in Main Auditorium, Thursday night, March 24, at 8:00.

Anna Emerson, played by Liz Walker Goffield, with a group of girls, plus the chaperone of Frances Perkins (Alice Johnson), bowed with the racing life of a debutante—and men in particular, has returned to her father's old island estate, which he, incidentally, off the coast of South Carolina.

This merry party has been on the island only a short while when the friends they "left behind" become restless, and set out to arrange their own party at which they will be a spread. With the aid of a few teaching nannies, filled with song and dance, the "great big men" again give favor with their ladies and the play ends with smooth sailing for all concerned.

Side-trotting the love affair of Steve Merrill, by Frances Rough, and Anne Emerson, are the attractive roles of Thanya and Sulp, played by Lou King and Sulp Geiger. Harry, by Virginia Harby, and Dick, "Ben" Barnwell, with great bravado uphold the side of the rebel sailors. Francis Furbush shows gleeful laughter and the shills are of an amazing nature.

There's a touch of pathos, a touch of comedy, a touch of beauty, and a touch of absurdity—everything that goes to make up an evening of real entertainment.

DEBATES IN TEXAS MEET

MARGUERITE ZEIGLER WILL EDIT JOURNAL

Dr. Jarrell Speaks on Simms at Joint Meeting of Literary Societies

Marguerite Zeigler, of Florence, was elected editor-in-chief of "The Winthrop Journal" for the school year 1936-37 at a joint meeting of the three Literary Societies in Johnson Hall, Tuesday at 4:30. Dr. Hampton Jarrell talked on William Gilmore Simms during the meeting, and a reception followed.

Marguerite Zeigler has been a contributing editor on "The Journal" staff for two years. She won third place for book reviews at the South Carolina Press Association held at Clemson last fall.

At present she is manager of Freshman Debaters' League, secretary of the Social Service Club, a member of Strawberry Leaf, Winthrop Literary Society, Secondary Education Club; I. K. C. the Senate, and Tau Omega Kappa Social Club.

She has been distinguished in academic work every semester. For two years she was a member of her class varsity hockey team.

At the Strawberry Leaf Tournament at which representatives from twenty-three colleges and universities participated last December, Marguerite won first place in the after-dinner speaking contest.

At the election, Dr. H. M. Jarrell talked on William Gilmore Simms and eight historical romances of the author written during the Revolutionary period from 1780 to 1782 in lower South Carolina.

The plot for these romances is centered on the partisan warfare carried on by such groups as Francis Marion and his men. Simms used the historical romance, which he considered the highest form of literary art, because the fact of the guerrilla warfare carried on by Marion and his men were hard to find, since these men were only state troops and kept very few records. Also, the historical romances allowed the author to make use of legend.

According to Dr. Jarrell, Simms not only tells a good story, but also gives a good historical background of the period. He is "convincing" in his reality.

After Dr. Jarrell's speech, the members of the three Literary Societies held an informal reception in the foyer of Johnson Hall, where ice cream and crackers were served.

Elizabeth Gregg, president of the Wade Hampton Society, presided over the meeting and introduced the speaker.

Those chosen are: Mary Ellen Adams, Margaretta Austin, Ruth Benson, Marie Boone, Helen Callison, Louise Cautman, Katherine McCollum, Edith Henderson, Caroline Hutto, Elizabeth Kennedy, Nell King, Margaret Putnam, Jean Sellers, Marguerite Tidmarsh, Ann Tidmarsh, and Amelia Verone.

HUGHES AND KINSELLA TO CONDUCT INSTITUTE

Concert Pianists Will Teach Course at Winthrop Summer School

Mr. Edwin Hughes, master teacher and eminent pianist of New York City, and Miss Hazel Kincella, concert pianist, author, and major teacher of piano at the University of Nebraska College of Music, will again teach at Winthrop College Summer School this year.

Mr. Hughes' course will consist of two private lessons and three one-hour class lessons each week for a four-week session, beginning June 8 and continuing through July 4. The course is laid out along the most advanced lines of modern music education as applied to the study of the piano.

The work has for its basis a clear presentation of the fundamental principles which underlie correct technique and comprehensive technical development, and includes the immediate application of these basic principles to an extensive selection of study material chosen from the finest works in the literature of the instrument.

Hand-in-hand with this study of the Technique of Manipulation, the Technique of Interpretation is taken up. Mr. Hughes' unique presentation of this subject has proved of vital importance to all who have attended his classes, leading as it does to independence, expressiveness and power in interpretation, and to the development of imagination, personality, and individuality in performance.

Certificate will be given at the close of the session to those pupils satisfactorily completing the full course of private and class lessons.

Miss Kincella will direct a piano teachers' institute of four weeks, continuing from June 15 through June 27. (Continued on Page 4)

NOTICE

Just preceding the ceremony Miss Jacqueline Sealy, girlfriend friend of the bride, sang in her lovely soprano voice, the old, yet ever tender, "I Love You Truly"—Miss Sealy was a becoming gown of print chiffon, an early spring mode. With this, she wore a pink picture hat, and pink accessories.

As the strains of the wedding march were heard, the bridal party began to enter, and grouped themselves on either side of the altar ("gather ye rosebuds while ye may") in health which the Reverend Mr. Hixwood T. Terry joined the radiant young couple (Continued on page four)

FRIDAY, MARCH 27, 1936

TO THE STUDENT BODY

We, the new order, have many promises to make to the student body this paper serves. Though we realize they are the same declarations made each year with the change of each staff, we can only say that we will try the harder since we realize we are striving for the ideal.

We are determined to keep your wishes before us, to be your spokesman, to interpret and express your sentiments. But we intend to ensure where condemnation seems necessary and, likewise, to praise where applause seems fitting. We wish to inform and entertain you—to keep you alert to both the broad implications and the ordinary slipshaps of campus incidents.

Thus the task we set ourselves is manifold. Of you we ask only one thing: Tell us our faults. We are too close to the work of The Johnsonian to keep the needed perspective; you can give us this objective view if you will.

Our hopes are high. We have to work with you and for you.

VINDICATION

Northerners may bite and point fingers of scorn, teachers may exhort, purists may rave; but we, at last, will go serenely on our way, confident in our phrasing and satisfied with our justification.

No longer will we feel the pangs of conscience as we indulge in a natural expression. Not even the pronouncements of an entire legion of grammarians will cause the slightest waver. From now on, we may talk in peace: The King of England, in a recent radio speech, used twice the expression "you all!"

DEAD ORGANIZATIONS?

Exactly what happens at the meetings of the majority of clubs on this campus? A hastily prepared program is generally given. One or two persons read newspaper clippings or try to make out the words of a talk they have illegitimately written. Many of the members forget there is a club meeting; others come to the meeting to get their names recorded on the roll or to try to impress the faculty adviser who may be present. Some of the members slip out before the program is half over. What do we get from these clubs? Why do we care to clinch membership in so many organizations on the campus?

The problem of lifeless organizations, however, is not one peculiar only to Winthrop. Other campuses are facing the same problem. The difference is other colleges are trying to remedy the situation. Is it not time for Winthrop to wake up and decide what she shall do with these dead organizations? There is no better time to face the problem than the present. Officers of the clubs for another year will be elected within the next month. The future of many clubs will depend upon the choice of officers. Before these elections all students on the campus may well face this question: "Is my club a mere corpse?" Let us either reanimate our clubs or bury them!

What Do You Think?

Sit out on your trunk some afternoon and stop the first five people who pass. Having once gained their attention, ask them most any vital (or otherwise) question that may as the time be troubling you. As any rate that's one way of taking a random census of opinion. The question on this particular matter mind for the day was "What Artist Course member did you like best and why?"

Alice Johnson ("pammy number one")

Party of the first part: Hello Alice. Alice: Hello X.

Party of the first part: What Artist Course member did you like best? Alice: Ballet Rums, why?

Party of the first part: That's what I want to know.

Alice (after careful thought): Well, it was a combination of three types of entertainment—dancing, drama, and music—all of a superior nature. Why just think what you got for your money.

Mary Glover ("pammy number 11")

Party of first part carries out some introductory procedure.

Mary: Amelia Earhart.

Party of first part: Why?

Mary: Because she was such a charming and delightful person. She had a wonderful sense of humor and afforded really enjoyable entertainment and not something that the audience forced itself to appreciate.

Amelia Earhart also received the incorporated vote of Margie Mitchell and McKeen, all because to one she gave a flower from her orange and with the other she shook hands. They added incidentally that she was so extremely interesting speaker.

Ballet Rums received the vote of passersby number V, and VI; namely Mary B. Ingram and Elizabeth Crum. Roughly speaking their reasons were that the Ballet was of a different nature; it appealed to one's esthetic sense and was an expression of rhythmic movement.

So you see, you never can tell just what profit may result from a twenty minutes trunk sit.

DR. FRIEDEL'S ARTICLE PUBLISHED "Problems of Selective Admission," an article by Dr. Gordon Friezel, appeared in the March issue of the Bulletin of the Association of American Colleges. The article treats of the attainment of proper aims without selective admission and the practicality of selective admission in tax-supported colleges.

DR. WHEELER TO SPEAK Dr. Paul M. Wheeler will speak in Orangeburg, April 9, at the Winthrop Daughters of that city.

Rogers Deering, farm machinery fortune heir, has bequeathed $7,000,000 to Northwestern University.

FACULTY OPINION

Mr. J. F. Thomassen

A certain attractive young lady approached me today, and just as I was ready for her to say something pleasant about how she had enjoyed the discussion of the past hour, she said something quite different: "Will you say something for The Johnsonian this week?" I couldn't say on Monday that this is so sudden, but I did think I'll get even with you and, here goes.

Politics versus Merit—Are you young people interested in politics? If not, why do you play politics? "Oh," you say, "we get our cue from the older ones." Well, that floors me and sets me to stammering for answer. I feel tempted to say that you are too smart and dainty to do that, but I have a streak of stubbornness. I am bold to make inquiry: Are you making no better progress with a Youth Movement than that? Are you content to carry-on with the same old vices, in the same old ways? Please rise up and say no.

But you say, "We must be polite, just the same as individuals must be tactful; there's no use to stand out to us some more of that impractical idealism." The answer is that being polite and tactful to the degree that is right does not demand of one the abandonment of principles of honesty and sincerity. A departure from these principles destroys one's self respect; it leads to hypocrisy and deceit. The great Maasryk said, "Only the weak and second-rate take refuge in deceit."

Again you may demur on the ground that you are sometimes placed under authority which you must flatter and please, and that your position and promotion often depend upon your ability to catch the drift and quickly acquiesce. While this may be readily granted, still, truth is not altered; whenever authority makes such demands, it is a misuse of authority. Honesty may no longer be the best policy, but the truth seeker prefers to be honest, even at a temporary sacrifice.

For my part, I prefer to be optimistic. I believe the best chief of state is truth, and that merit will finally get the attention deserved. You may say, "Hope is the bread of the unhappy," but let me suggest something for you to think about. The honest and frank person need not necessarily be a fool; he can think straight about objects and entertain a good conscience; he does not have to lay awake and plan intrigues; he is not compelled to slip about in a mass of servileness—having nothing to conceal, he doesn't bother to conceal it; he need not be watched for certain manoeuvres on the political periphery, but he is always able to occupy himself usefully; and, although partially submerged, he may proceed serenely and discover many situations of welcome.

There's something else to consider. The people are moving upward in intelligence, youth should take great hope in this fact. Many of our former political practices are being rapidly discarded. Have you considered why dictators have become so popular, even in our democracy? How much of it may be attributed to disgust on the part of the people with under-cover trickery? Again, have you sought to account for whispering campaigns? Perhaps such campaigning is normal to the political way, but may it not be an adaptation to a situation where there is fear of misuse of authority? And, maybe it is an intermediate step which pretends a better day rather than a worse state. The bad things of the old situation must give way; if we are to make a greater use of social science, there is no other open course. Yes, I am optimistic. I believe in youth; I think youth will get a program which will lead in paths of courage, honor, and truth.

Yours with confidence, JOHN FURMAN THOMASON.

Professor Encounters Embarrassing Moment

Cambridge, Mass. (ACP)—A certain young history professor of Harvard, locally celebrated for a unique absent-mindedness, made what was most definitely the wrong answer the other day. Last month the professor's wife was rewarded for years of work in the field of poetry when Scribner's published an anthology she had compiled. Through what has empirically been called "an act of God," the department publication found the young woman in a hospital, having that morning given birth to a son.

The same afternoon two student friends of the professor met him and stopped to congratulate him on the pleasant event. As they started to express their best wishes, the professor put up his hand, waved them away, and stopped to congratulate ME, boys, he said modestly. "My wife did it all by herself. I herself, with just the help of two Dunster House sisters."

BLUE SPECTATOR

Isn't it great holidays begin tomorrow? ... Everybody's talking about them they're going and how many times they'll see Carl, Jr., or Jim.

Wasn't the womanless wedding a wow? Our "wif's" are excellent imitators of the false, although Dr. Farrell admits that being a flower girl is a bit tiresome for his feet. ... Personal nomination for the most excited girl on the campus—Frances Holland. She's leaving for Texas this week-end—Lucky beater!

Did you know Miriam Hopkins was at one time a pupil of Prof. J. P. Thomason? Not bad training, huh? Jesse Teague looks somewhat flurried—unfortunately Junior Politics practice has been prominent at the University Evans' "grown-uppitts" look since she got her permanent?

Ask Lucy Ladd about her misfortune while chasing a spider on the ceiling!

Does North play an important part in May Day? She boasts the queen, maid-of-honor, and eleven attendants. Last week when it started raining (training is the correct word) in Science Hall, Dr. Nautilus felt it necessary to contain his class with a chemistry book in one hand and an umbrella in the other he continued the lesson.

Oddities come to light—The May Queen and maid-of-honor of '35 and '36 are members of the same club. ... Haters will be seen prominently at the Junior class, and will be of the "Y".

Mary and Sarah Cunningham like to capture flies in the dining room as specimens for Dr. Green's Nature Study class. Sarah Ferguson's and Frances Legare's most prized possession is "their uth" (ask Otis), while Ann Stewart's bandaged finger is priceless in some of her classes.

"The English Folk Dancers" who went to Columbia Monday evening gave a rehearsal in North Sunday night, and what "striking" costumes they wore!

Did you see "Mopie" Moore acting as professor in a certain class on Monday? ... And did she present an interesting lesson? ... Dr. Jarroll says that a poet who has given birth to a poem feels like a hen who has just laid an egg. ...

And then there was the girl who wouldn't call Margaret Nance to speak to a certain student because she didn't want to speak to said Margaret Nance.

President's Dismissal Demanded By Students

New York City (ACP)—The battle over the retention or dismissal of the College of the City of New York's President Frederick B. Robinson has been reopened with the demand of the institution's student council for the resignation of the man they believe disqualified for his position.

The action of the student body followed the recent report of a special alumni investigating committee which asked for the dismissal of Dr. Robinson.

"We do not believe that the present faculty-student discord and conflict can be eliminated or diminished so long as Dr. Robinson is our president," the students reported. "His association with Hearst, his bad taste, his reactionary ideas and the general disrespect in which he is held disqualify him for his high post."

Dr. Rogers Reveals Success Secret; Moths Lead Way To Early Riches

In an exclusive interview with Dr. Rogers we have uncovered the real secret of his success. Yes, it's just this: he began his career of money-earning at the tender age of six.

Having, like all normal children, a great desire to have money of his own, and realizing, unlike all normal children, that money earned by the labor of one's hands is infinitely more valuable than money received as a gift, he cast about him for some remunerative task.

He succeeded in getting offers of jobs and even attempted some of them, but, alas, they were all too difficult for him, and he was forced to admit his failure.

However, not to be downed by circumstances entirely beyond his control, our ambitious hero kept his eyes peeled for other opportunities to try his luck in the world of fortune. And so it happened about that time that a certain harmful moth took a decided fancy to his father's garden and so infuriated the father that he offered his son the enormous amount of one cent for every ten moths he succeeded in destroying.

At last, he had found just the job for him! Now he would not have to admit his incompetence! So for nearly six weeks he had toiled away catching moths for an hour daily. Finally, he felt that he had done his best, and proudly he claimed the thirteen cents that he had earned by killing one hundred and thirty of the injurious insects.

"And," said Dr. Rogers, "the remarkable about it is that, although my father did not check up to see if I reported accurately, I kept religious account of every day's work."

WINTHROP POETS MAKE GOOD!

Poetry is not the unexplored art it's often claimed to be. The following creations are products of a class of Dr. Wheeler's assigned to write poems in "good literary form and with perfect rhyme."

The weather was cold; the wind it blew;
And Willie he crawled under blankets two.

But the wind kept blowing, and the cold went all round,
So Willie up from his warm bed rose
To get more cover to keep him warm.
For he was sure there would be a storm.

Now Willie this time brought cover thick
And snuggled under them warm as a tick.

Next morning his mother called Willie down
But not from Willie heard she a sound.

She climbed the stairs, her heart in a strife—
She could not find Willie to save her life!

But there on his bed mashed flat by his head
Of covers he'd piled up in mountainous mode.

Was a paper doll Willie with smile all serene;
The moral to this poem is not really serene!

I tried to write my pen
By asking for a hint;
Instead, my friends suggest
That there's enough in print.

I went down with Spring
For surely she would aid;
But was I one, she wants
A snowy barricade.

At last I sigh and groan
And grtly wrack this rhyme.
But such verse is cast
And all have perfect rhyme.

I roused myself and went to tea
Wondering if my luck would be
Something new, or just the same—
To sit and chat with some queer dame
Who talked and talked of nothing
But aches and pains and kids and such.

So there I stood just in the door
And peered at those off seen before.
They "oh'd" and "ah'd" and whispered, too,
About the folks—and "what I'd do".
I turned to go, which was absurd,
So stayed and told 't what I'd just heard.

Memories of a Mumps Patient, Or Why I Am Immune To Mumps

BY AN ANONYMOUS MUMP
(On the Florida Alligator)

Prologue: I discover a huge bump on the left side of my jaw and before I start for the U. of F. infirmary I slip and fall down a whole flight of stairs which somebody assures me is very bad for the mumps.

The doc examines me and informs me I have mumps all right even though I have swallowed several quarts of pickles and lemonade without gaining weight. He says yes, they may come to the right side, and you, there will probably be complications. Naturally, I am not much comforted.

First day: I am rudely awakened at six a. m. with a piece of glass tickling my tonsils. I have a cell mate who is in a pretty bad way and I am considerably worried—about myself.

Second day: I feel pretty good, but am getting tired of lying flat on my back. I am told not to move even my head from the pillow or else . . .

Third day: I am convinced the nurses don't have my personal welfare at heart when they take my temperature so often. They just have to have some figures to put on a chart. The soup and crackers come regularly.

Fourth day: I ask what my temperature is, and nobody will answer. I wish I could read the thing myself. I count my pulse for half an hour out of sheer boredom. I hear frequent frenzied yells of "I'm going to walk out of here!" and much argument and shuffling.

Fifth day: I am convinced the nurses have a speech impediment or else they are a wee bit under par otherwise, so I decide to test one of them. I say to her: "What state is this?" and she says "Florida," so at least I know she can talk. I get mad because I know she has been holding' out on me, so I say, "Listen, do you know whom I am?" (I am a senior), and she says, "I can't recall your name, but I'll look at your chart and see." I quit.

Sixth day: The doc comes in to see me again with a faint smile and a probing hand. He stands and looks absent-mindedly out the window for a couple of minutes and goes out without saying more than a word and a half. I have smoked two packs of cigars today, and nurse relaxes into the human state long enough to remark that I'm awfully messy with my ashes.

Seventh day: I have been eating rice for a long time now and wonder when I'll get out. Nobody will say when, so I blast for a radio and some snappy literature and settle down for a month or two more or less.

Eighth day: My cell mate limps out and I feel like I am on a desert island. I have missed the holidays and I am much disappointed. Four roving "patients" peck over my swinging door like I am a rare zoological specimen.

Ninth day: I can leave tomorrow, the doc said so himself. I write, but one of the nurses speaks to me like I was a nazi and a senator and the shock almost gives me a relapse. Nurse bumps her nose on the swinging door going out, and mutters.

Tenth day: I wave off my well worn couch, wishing I had a stepladder, and manage to shove off a beard such as I never thought I was man enough to grow.

I dress and prepare to leave, but am stopped by one in white who doesn't recognize me, and insists I'm a visitor and wants to know how I got in. When she sees how weak I am she finally gives me my release papers, and her blessing. She hopes I can walk home, and so do I.

I set out to walk out the front door with a bill in one hand, and a stagger in both knees. I am now a well man, but they tell me, I can catch the mumps all over again if I don't watch out.

DR. McDILL DESCRIBES ETHIOPIAN PROBLEMS

Dr. T. H. McDill, pastor of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church at Gastonia, North Carolina, was guest speaker at the chapel hour on Wednesday, March 25. Dr. McDill discussed Ethiopia, its population, and its present day problems.

Throughout his talk Dr. McDill emphasized the fact that although Ethiopia is still a backward country it has existed as a Christian nation since earliest times. He pointed out the progress that is being made today in that country and the ways in which modern ideas are being adopted.

Following Dr. McDill's talk Jack Bealy, of the Winthrop Training School, sang two numbers, accompanied by Professor W. D. Roberts at the piano.

Everybody has the tennis "bug" so the courts are full from morn till night. The club began functioning this week but it's not too late to join. Doesn't matter whether you play or not—now's your chance to learn!

The Seniors are walking away with all the tournaments this year it seems . . . first hockey, then basketball, and swimming! How's that doing?

The basketball games were the "fastest and closest yet. The Senior-Junior Junior-Sophomore games were plenty stiff—guards and forwards checked each other to the Nth degree.

The two-day swimming meet was a big success—and didn't you love the comic relay—rope and pajama? Wasn't it a scream when Lorenz booby pants in the middle of the pool?

Speaking of swimming . . . we're going to have a dormitory meet for those who were not in the intermural last week. It will be run on same plans as the dormitory basketball game—after Spring holidays.

Basketball practice will begin as soon as we get back. All you fans come along and bring a friend.

"Little Nell" was our best diver again! Flomie, Katie, and Edgdy came first, second, and third, respectively. Nell, Dot, Pierone Dargatz, and Pieske were the best swimmers!

Do you like deck 'em, table tennis, horseshoe-pitching, badminton, serial darts, tether balls, and shuffle board? Join the Recreational Sports Club and keep up with the sports world! See Margaret Check, chairman.

Considerable investigation shows that there are many vacancies in Washington, D. C., for Southern graduates who aspire for work among society. Of all the best locations however, I can think of none more desirable than the Smithsonian Museum in which there is a remarkably rare collection of statuary. As a result of a heated correspondence with this institution, I have been informed that there are as many as six vacancies in the Statue Duster department.

The statue-duster's implements consist of a huge bunch of feathers, (preferably plucked from the tail of southern-raised turkey gobblers), a pair of dark glasses, a small convertible step-ladder, a stiffly starched apron from which dust can easily slide, a gas mask, and a derby.

The experienced duster has learned that the most practicable and satisfactory method of statue-dusting is the H. to F. Method. There are two obvious rationalizations why this is the best method. First, by beginning at the H (head) and working down, the dust is so perfectly controlled by gravity that it neatly descends into a compact little ring around the F. (foot) of the sculpture, molded, or cast (as the case may be) figure. Secondly, by the time the duster has worked a wide figure, she is so exhausted that it is well that she be near the lower surface of the room where she may sit at the foot of the statue and, in dark glasses, ask alms as she projects the derby with the terminal part of her left forelimb. (It is advisable that she remove the gas mask so that people will not mistake her for a dinosaur from another department). Next, and lastly, after the necessary (or satisfactory) lump of coins has been accumulated, the duster, having recovered her former strength, may get up, wrap the dust into the derby, dispose of it, and repeat the whole process.

The hours of statue dusting, however, are irregular; and the duster, having recovered her former strength, may get up, wrap the dust into the derby, dispose of it, and repeat the whole process.
