Causes Of Apathy

Winthrop seems to be a very obvious problem this year. Many students who have noticed this趋势 are noting, "Why do I have to sit through the teach's drivel?"

But, one has stepped to consider the ways and those-are-attached to the world.

Weiner's definition of apathy: "Want of attention or interest; a passive state of indifference to what appeals to feelings or interest." Direct result of the above is that many Winthrop students have at present. We feel that there is a reason for this.

What, then, is the reason? We feel that there are two main reasons:

First, there has been an increase in academic demands. The administration seems to want more from the faculty: the faculty is, turn wants more from the students, and the students want more from the administration. Whatever the cause, the stress is spreading on all levels of the campus. Students are fighting a battle not only with the scheduling of many organizational and departmental functions. The student, trying desperately to keep up with his professors, has not had the time to find time to attend all the meetings and activities that she should. Therefore, we are turning out a sort of false, unexamined, uncorroded, walking machine - not a well-rounded, well-educated student.

A third reason may be climate. Can we, as a student body of 3,000 live together happily? Is it short, is it really possible for 3,000 people to get along? Do they have the extra incentive of pressing

Student Immaturation

Although it is generally agreed that the majority of the student body tends to be immature, it is a fact that they tend to be more immature than other students of the same age. There are a number of reasons for this.

First, they are younger; they have less experience than the average college student. Second, they are more likely to be influenced by their peers. Third, they are more likely to be influenced by the media.

Although this may seem to be a problem, it is not as serious as it may seem. The majority of students are able to mature and become well-rounded adults.

Winthrop Loses In Hockey Play

The Furman University senior hockey team defeated Winthrop's team 3-2 Saturday in a game badly affected by adverse weather conditions.

These games, Karl Wake may not forget for a long time. The winthropers, fighting the cold, the snow, and their own inferiority complex, lost their only game of the season, which is disappointing because of the obviously better quality of the Winthrop team.

The Winthrop team played a tight game and the Furman team played a tight game. The winning goal was scored by Andy Hunt with just over a minute left in the game.

The Furman team consisted of three forwards and two defensemen. The Winthrop team had four forwards and three defensemen. The Furman team had a higher scoring average than the Winthrop team.

He feels that the campus is very different from his home country. He finds the food and weather especially challenging.
