WHY THE DELAY?

What's the matter with the election of our marshals for next year? Why is there such a delay in choosing fourteen Juniors who "have never been conditioned on their work or have never been restricted"?

Is there any lack of girls who qualify?

We know the answer: the system of selecting marshals is clumsy and outdated. The committee for choosing marshals has so many restrictions placed upon it that its hands are tied; it is hindered in its choice by lack of intimate knowledge of the girls; maintenance of the high standards seems impossible.

But the very prestige attached to the position of marshals has lost some of its glamor. The basic principle that made marshals an honor was its bestowal on a group selected from the entire Junior class; today marshals are chosen from a small group who are interested—or profess interest—in one phase of college activities—the literary society.

We realize that marshals is not the distinction it once was. The difficulties with which the committee has become entangled prove that the present system of choosing marshals has become almost ineffective. If marshals is to continue being an "honor," a new method of selection must be devised—one that will be efficient and truly representative.

A BROWSING ROOM

Last year in a poll conducted by The Johnsonian, reading was voted the most popular pastime of Winthrop girls. This vote shows that Winthrop students are interested in reading for pleasure. In our library a step has been made to promote this interest by setting aside a room for those who wish to read for pleasure. This room, however, is furnished with only a bare table and four straight chairs, such as are found throughout the library. Can't something be done to make this room more attractive to those who wish to spend their leisure time in reading?

In many colleges and libraries there are browsing rooms. In these rooms are found large comfortable chairs, interesting pictures, and attractively bound books. Such rooms provide a cozy, comfortable place for those interested in reading. Can't we have such a browsing room in our own library?

BROAD-MINDEDNESS

Frequently we are given the advice "Be broad-minded!" And quite good advice it is, indeed, if, when followed, it enables us to see and respect the other person's point of view. But when we try to apply this advice to our activities, we find that it will not work. Since we are not all geniuses, it is necessary for us to restrict ourselves to the few fields to which we are particularly suited. This restriction, of course, should not be of such a nature that it would make us bury ourselves deep in one field, and have nothing to do with any other. It does mean, however, that we should not spread ourselves over so many fields and, consequently, in so thin a "layer" that we would become a "jack of all trades and a master of none." Admittedly, versatility is an admirable characteristic in anyone. But, unless one is more than mediocre in a field outside that in which his talents lie, his best course is to concentrate on only his special scope, thus making of those interests in which he can never excel merely hobbies. For experience has shown that "deep water does not stagnate; shallow does, before it evaporates."

Famous Harvard Teacher Resigns

Cambridge, Mass.—(ACP)—George Lyman Kittredge, last of the famed group of scholars which brought glory to Harvard in the last half century, will never see another class with his brilliant exposition of English literature, his biting wit, or the temper which often led him to stamp out of a classroom because of inattention or a slight disturbance.
 He gave his last lecture on May 1, and his resignation is effective September 1. Member of the class of 1880, world's foremost Shakespearean authority, and an especially colorful personality, Professor Kittredge was an institution at Harvard for 50 years.

France Gives Award To French Fraternity

Madison, Wis.—(ACP)—In recognition of the high standards maintained at the University of Wisconsin-Madison Fraternity, oldest organization of its kind in the United States, the French government has authorized a gift to the house of 4300 Francis (4413).
 Rene Weiller, French consul at Chicago who was instrumental in obtaining the award declared the Wisconsin society the best French-speaking group he had seen in his ten years in the United States.

DEAR JUDY

Grab a chair because you've got a shock coming to you! I made the staff! But there's a catch in it. How instead of just one thing to struggle through and worry about, they throw four at me. For one of 'em I find myself dashing to a corner of the earth in which I've never been. I ask dubious questions and get answers in huge words that I can't even guess the meanings of. I try to put down what the front of each one sounds like (planning to ask some contriving soul for assistance later). Then I wind my way roomward, sit on the bed, and think. All my news is just alike. It doesn't say the same thing, but it means it. After hours of trying to keep from saying "right" twice in the same sentence I copy my work neatly in ink. All the 11 and 12 lines on one page, so I just draw a line between 'em and beam at the finished product with pride. That is no more. I am told that each article must be on a sheet to itself, the third one can be left out. I should start lower on the page and, by all means, write bigger. I thought this was a conservative newspaper; after all, I was only trying to save paper for them. The other three articles remain to be written—besides doing that one over. Don't long for the lie of a newspaper woman!

Just found a ride home for the holiday. Phone Mama and wring permission from her before she knows just what's happening. Hope she expects me. I have just returned that I forgot to pack my toothbrush. Probably I'll leave it in the end, because when I get out of this class, I have to get permission from the Dean, hunt my hat, and persuade Missie that she can't go home with me.

We had one little girl up here that got some beautiful flowers for Mother's Day. Wasn't that nice?

Before this class is over I have to finish those lovely news articles.

Love,
 FRISCILLA.

Another Open Letter—To Anybody

Well, I've changed my address. I'm now sitting in The Johnsonian office, wearing a smug smile and still tearing the hair out of my head. The reason for my smugness is, of course, caused by the fact that I am now one of the elect: I'm no longer in that common rank of would-be Johnsonian Reporters. The reason for the hair-tearing now is infinitely more important. Have you ever stared up and suddenly found yourself looking at nothing but miles and miles of space—great stretches of vague, empty space? That's what The Johnsonian staff suddenly realized would be confronting the Student Body of Winthrop College Friday at 12:30. Space! Four columns of space! Four columns of empty space! Four columns of empty space that must be filled! Four columns of empty space that must be filled by whom? If I keep this up long enough I'll hate at least (ex.) The Editor must run down to meet her closing text. Yet we all know it would be detrimental to her already precarious reputation if we allow four columns of great big empty space to remain over any space.

Well, it tells down to this: We, my colleague and I, the newly-acquired creators of this paper—must postpone the pressing trip downtown and set about fulfilling all the little miracles we have to take care of. At first we decide to be cute. People naturally don't connect up a feature with cuteness. So it goes—when suddenly we decide that to write features, one is usually cute herself. The cute features is out. What about being flippancy? Flippancy flip off a flip of flippancy, perhaps. Then we decide that there aren't enough flippancy people who read The Johnsonian to warrant so much flippancy. Now that we have exhausted two of the alternatives that one would naturally turn to, we decide to be serious. Everyone projects her lower lip, lets that set jaw drop, partly closes her eyes, and begins to think seriously about seriousness. We look sympathetically at each other and are so overcome by our mutual pity that we see nothing else to do but abandon seriousness and tell each other the latest jokes of the campus. Anyway, everyone agrees everybody appears to be serious. Why doesn't Dorothy Dix advocate seriousness? Then comes the long, long discussion on when is one natural and when is one unnatural. Besides, to be natural would mean to print what we are at this moment thinking and of course there are some things that it would be unnatural to print. There is simply no way out. It took brave and hardy men to break the Hindenburg line—but it could be broken. A dead line, however, remains dead—no matter who's trying to break it.

Chances of employment this June are our times better than they were a year ago, Columbia authorities report.

BLUE SPECTATOR

This is the time of the year when even the staidest of contributors gets too pensive to speculate with much success. We suddenly find ourselves faced with the fact that no day has more than twenty-four hours and at least three or four are used for sleeping. With this in mind we begin to fear that parallel for five subjects, a term paper, and a notebook full of experience can not be finished in two weeks. Withstanding the rush, if we had known that on Wednesday afternoon Dr. Wheeler and Dr. Scott were playing tennis, they would certainly have had an audience.

Rose Rudnick's head got money from home at least four different times for a beige pocketbook and a pair of gloves. Every time what she wants is a little beyond her, so she eats her money and waits for a bargain.

The other day Mary Spalding's name was posted for a special, but when she went to the office she found that Mrs. Jennings wanted to talk to her and thought that would bring her around. Alice Johnson got notices of student government installation for a week without ever finding out what it was all about, and when she was supposed to be dubbed president of the senate she was playing around in Pewell's pasture.

THE LAST OF THE BLUE SPECTATOR!

The time has come—yes, at last!—for the revelation of the character impersonation of the Blue Spectator. True, she has had some several associates who will carry on the good work anon, but the Spectator, as such, will be one of us nevertheless. So with her farewell she wishes to advance as much pure tattle as possible—in her modesty though she is hesitant about revealing the personal history even of some acquaintances.

First of all she wants to warn "Lizzie the Lug" that the occupant of Spectator's room next year may not be so easily inveigled into leaving her window unfastened for Lizzie and her companions. And further she may not be so willing to have her light flicked on and off at all hours of the night—only to see Eddie Snumburger that Rina Emmagranner is safely in.

And the Spectator hopes that the couples reported engaged, or perhaps married, to these many years, live forever in supreme happiness.

Anybody who has the slightest complaint to make about anything the Spectator has done, or might do, may have overstepped, or something she may have omitted, will kindly receive Spectator's apologies.

As was suggested earlier in the game, Spectator bids farewell.

Sling a Little Lingo

By Associated Collegiate Press
 About every six months this department has to hire etymological experts to go over the college press of America and define for us the meanings of all the newest expressions, otherwise the time would come when college papers would be incomprehensible to us.

The latest investigations have produced some excellent suggestions. For example, did you know that "gen" "silly" and "dick" all mean the same thing? In general they refer to a male who just doesn't rate, who is a punk, a wabouter. If you get our meaning. The corresponding term for a female of the same type is "flatto" although it is considered proper to use "floozie."

And should a male find himself tied to such a woman, he is in a "tizzy". Courtnish has been redefined as meaning the act of "pitching woo" or "making school", and considering the slightly straggly nature of much contemporary adolescent love, the expressions seem appropriate.

A "wout fellah" may suddenly find himself become very "sassy" just before finals which means he has found it necessary to study hard. In such a case, the reason for his lack of knowledge probably is that he has been spending too much time "huddling with his honey buddies".

Newest terms of endearment are "my little chickadee" or "my little rocky-mountain-canary" or "my little fair-weathered friend".

We were a little precipitous in announcing that The Tellers would be here May 8, Apologia.

We don't know how to apply the following joke from "Brooklyn College Vanguard," to Winthrop, but it's too good to keep:

Moderns Teach
 Panhandler: "Hey, buddy, could you spare a buck for a cup of coffee?"
 B. C. Student: "A dollar for coffee! Preposterous!"
 Panhandler: "Just tell me yes or no—but don't try to tell me how to run my business!"

And we print this with the assurance that we're not hitting at anyone.

Not You:

Did it ever occur to you how much time it would take to satisfy each professor? I think it is generally expected (or hoped) among professors that each student will spend two hours in preparation of his class. . . . All right, let's try—'till say the average student takes a total of eighteen hours of work or say, six classes. That gives him eighteen hours per week in preparation for each class or thirty-six hours in study. His work days are six out of a week. He sleeps eight hours per day, or a total of forty-eight hours. Another two hours a day are consumed in feeding his face; that makes twelve more. If he's modest he spends an hour (only) per day dressing, combing his hair and even bathing. Chapel consumes another two hours a day (he put it conservatively). Let's toss in another hour for incidentals. Now let's add—you add: after me, first math is my Waterloo. . . . We have a total of one hundred and twenty-three hours out of a possible one hundred and forty-four. That leaves just twenty-one hours out of the six days for exercise, "bathing," and other diversions. How many of us do it? We don't know anybody. . . .

Here's something we gleaned from The Florida Flambeau. (It seems they're experiencing the same situation that we are.)

Education and culture certainly are not synonymous. We discovered this by the actions of those few locked out of the dining-room Monday morning. Going on the assumption that all women want to be beautiful, we suggest that full-length mirrors be placed at the door. We're sure that those who sit there could see themselves as others see them, they would cease their performance through pederastic desires, if not cultural ones.

Judging by the following clipping from The Gloucester it would seem that Carolina has some rules quite as antiquated as some of ours. (But, at least, they don't enforce them—we hope.)

According to the rules of the University, made in 1897, any student appearing in woman's attire would be suspended or expelled.

It is also forbidden to play cards, lie, or to insult a student. And believe it or not, you can't even keep a mule on the campus.

Be careful! Don't about "Eat" or "Trash" at a first year student or you will be expelled if the rules of the University are enforced. Don't use tobacco on the campus, and above all, be sure to get permission from the president before going to a theater.

The Florida Flambeau's Tattle column is outstanding by its absence. Maybe it's not a State college for Women paper after all.

Strawberries And Ice Join List; Uncrowded Roads To Wealth Cited

"How did I earn my first money?" slowly repeated Mr. Terry, when questioned by a reporter who dashed rather abruptly into his office.

"Well, I don't know whether it was the first, but picking strawberries was one of the first ways," he said, casually rubbing his glasses. "The strawberries were ripe in June, just after the school, and we boys and girls of the Hudson River Valley picked them for two cents a quart basket."

After a few seconds of apparent reminiscing, Mr. Terry continued: "In the winter at the age of twelve, I worked on the ice and made my first big money—one dollar and a half per day. This was before artificial ice was introduced, and the ice on the upper Hudson was harvested when it became a foot or two thick."

Minnesota Students Find Exams A Boon

(By Associated Collegiate Press)
 Minneapolis, Minn.—(ACP)—Black coffee or coffee tablets, ammonia, cologne, cigarettes, cold showers, and the other common devices used by students in the throes of exam periods are no longer countenanced by University of Minnesota students and faculty members. Instead, they were the banner for benzidine sulphate tablets.

Although members of the pharmacology department and doctors of the student health department advised against the use of the new "anti-fatigue" pills—they were put on the market only a few months ago—their use continued unabated.

Chief objection to the drug, which users claim will prevent fatigue for about six hours without any resultant depression, is that its exact properties are not yet known. University of Minnesota scientists are engaged in research in the attempt to discover if benzidine sulphate is habit-forming or destructive to body tissues, but meanwhile, their colleagues and students go right on taking it. One Minneapolis drug company reported the sale of 1,000 tablets with a week.

Behavior Code Meets Resistance

(By Associated Collegiate Press)
 Madison, Wis.—(ACP)—When Dean of Men Scott E. Goodnight attempted to improve a behavior code upon University of Wisconsin students recently, he met with stubborn resistance.

The dean's code, which includes provisions barring liquor at any university social function, limiting all fraternity parties to first floors and chapter houses, and a rule giving a faculty committee power to deal with all cases of drunkenness, at parties or elsewhere, was denounced as "high-schoolish" by fraternity men.

Declaring that there was no proof student conduct was worse than at any previous time, The Daily Cardinal, student paper, derided the attempt of the dean to extend control over student affairs.

Graduate Answers Impossible Queries

Out in Omaha, the officials who hire men for the Farm Credit Bureau have one of those highly scientific intelligence tests to which every candidate is subjected. Up to a few days ago, these tests included a couple of catch questions—the kind that couldn't be answered. You proved you had brains by not trying to answer them. All went according to plan until a University of Iowa graduate turned up for the examination. He asked two questions—and to the horror of the scientists he answered them both. Here they are, with his answers:

First Waker-Upper Improves Technique

(By Associated Collegiate Press)
 Among the ingenious college youth of the country, we think we ought to place the name of Harold Jernum of Columbia alongside that of young Mr. Gorn, founder of the Veterans of Future Wars.

Mr. Jernum, you may remember, is the student who worked up a tidy bit of business waking up his fellow students each morning so they would not miss class. He earns his way through school with his deft taps on the Shoulder and Nodges in the Rib.

But in this business, too, science has led to refinement of method. Mr. Jernum does nothing so crude now, as Jabbing in the Middle. Now he has a special concoction of ammonium chloride in a little vial, which he slips under the nose of the deep breathing ones.

This technique is 100 per cent efficient, since it not only awakens, but it instantly clears the mind and leaves one ready for the first hour class.

Of course, Mr. Jernum had first to sell his proposition to fellow students. An example of his promotion method, as he himself described it: "You take Fernando, Well, Fernando set his alarm clock for 6:30 a. m. When he was sleeping I sneaked in his room and set it for 6:30 a. m. The next morning I made a call and easily convinced him of the superiority of my method over that of alarm clocks."

Strange Answers Are Given To Questions

Addis Ababa, king of the Bluffs, Sir Anthony Eden, captain of the stricken liner, Dixie Maxim Livinoff, king of the Bulgarians, Nicholas Murray Butler, governor of Chatham.

Such were a few of the answers received from students in the school of journalism recently in a current events test. Merrily continuing their description of the world about them, the future news-patrons revealed further that:

Sir Samuel Hoare is commander of the French fleet, Richard E. Byrd is a senator from West Virginia, I.G.O. stands for the Illinois Conservation camp, a branch of the C.I.C., Mickey Cochrane is a professional swimmer and diver, Fred Perry is an intrepid Arctic explorer, J. Edgar Hoover is a former president of the United States and has just completed a book entitled "The White House Gang."—The Daily Northwestern.
