Will The Greek Life Work?

by Sheila Nolan

Coffee cup in hand and a grin on his face, associate Dean of Students at Winthrop College, Richard Cummings, grabbed aside pressing papers and decided to talk about the prospect of fraternities and sororities on campus.

"The first indication of fraternities and sororities was about the fall of 1974. A student came in and asked me if it was possible to have them on campus. I said well, I don't know, why not I told the student to go around and see what kind of interest he found on campus and come back with some kind of proposal. Then I would see what I thought," said Cummings. Well, that was the last I heard concerning fraternities and sororities on campus.

Then some students came into my office asking the same question. Two years later, then fourteen men saying that they did want fraternities.

Dean Cummings researched the issue as quickly as possible. What resulted was a proposal that passed the Board of Trustees on January 23, 1976 which asked for the establishment of fraternities and sororities as social and service organizations on campus.

"The initiative came from the students. The school tried to accommodate that interest. I think the interest is still there. But, I'm not sure that the commitment is there," said Cummings. A panel from the College Fraternity Secretaries Association has been asked to come to Winthrop and explain the different aspects of the various fraternities and sororities available to students.

"We've already sent them our policy for colonizing. We have a closed policy which means that we ask that national fraternities and sororities wait for an invitation from us before coming in to talk to students. This keeps some student aware of the number of outside organizations that would come in. This also insures the fact that the initiative will come from students who desire a certain fraternity or sorority to be started on campus."

"There are a few students who are reluctant to accept these new types of organizations on campus. I think the negative connotations of the Greek life such as hazing and cliques have been overemphasized as compared to the positive aspects, such as service projects."

Cummings said that with fraternities and sororities on campus, it gives students another opportunity to get involved in some type of leadership position on campus.

"In some respects, the organizations would offer an opportunity for students who would not otherwise be involved in campus life to be involved as a group of students as far as interacting in service projects or intramural competition. Last lasting friendships can be formed through these means also," said Cummings.

If a group of students wish to form a particular fraternity or sorority, they make their desire known to the Dean's office. Then, information concerning the organizations are provided to the students. The group will make the selection on the basis of time and commitment they have to invest.

"These organizations are long lasting commitment. They are not going to establish themselves if the students aren't going to be committed," said Cummings.

There are no special living conditions for the organizations on The Winthrop College campus. The school will wait until there are firmly established chapters on campus with their own governing body such as a Fraternity Council.

"The particular fraternity or sorority decides whether to build or not. There are plenty of meeting areas available on campus. All students have to do is put in a space request form."

"I feel that fraternities and sororities have really gone to a service orientation. They are on campuses to contribute to campus life and the community as most of them require service projects. Also, I think they would enhance the intramural and intercollegiate programs on campus," said Cummings.

The commuting population of Winthrop is over 65%. Dean Cummings expressed a belief that fraternities and sororities will create more involvement for commuting students on campus.

"All national organizations that we have talked are open for hazing. There are new images over the past years that seem to enhance campus life rather than detract from it. The student government is working on a set of guidelines that will outlaw hazing at Winthrop. I think the day is gone for that," said Cummings.

"I had a female student come in and say that there was a great deal of female interest in starting a sorority. But, that is the last I heard of it."

There has been no strong opposition indicated to the Dean. Several members of the faculty are interested in helping with the organization of fraternities and sororities.

"If students want a fraternity or sorority, we are here to help. All they have to do is ask," said Cummings.

SAGA Officers
Stress Awareness

by Sheila Nolan

"Right now, it's hard to say what SGA will be doing next year. We're racking our brains out for ideas. So, for the time being, we are taking them to the administration to see how they feel about them and to get them off our backs," said Ginger Barfield, president of SGA.

"I think SGA has got everything going for them. We're going coed and we've got an excellent administration to work with."

Patricia Shala, president of Senate and vice president of SGA.

Barfield and Shala were interviewed recently concerning their plans for SGA during the coming school year.

Both officers said that they would like to see activities such as the newly installed taping system and the spring event, Muscular Dysrophy Day, continued. Barfield also mentioned that there was a "remote possibility that SGA might handle something similar to the Model U.N. on a high school level."

"I was very apprehensive about coordination when it first came up because I liked the atmosphere that we had, but I've been very happy with the way changes have come about. We've got guys involved in every aspect of campus life," said Barfield.

"The dorm and dorm hours remaining the same for several more years. That's the same as the upswing. I think we're going to direct more activities to commuters since they do represent the majority on campus," said Barfield.

"The thing I think students need to know is what SGA is. Students need to be aware. Next year, I want dorm senators to make students aware. Hopefully, we will have some type of bulletin boards in the dorms. As long as we try to get the information to the students, that's the best we can do," said Shala.

Winthrop is going up but we haven't lost the personal touch. Winthrop has a good percentage of people interested. We're losing traditions but we're changing with the times, too," said Shala. Cummins has said Shala has for the Senate that it will be meeting every other week rather than weekly as it has been doing this year. Shala felt that with this new schedule, there will be more business going through, more time to plan, and it will give senators more time to make the student body aware of what the senate is doing.

PATRICIA SHAIA

"I want the Senate to sponsor a talk-a-thon once a month. I don't know if it will work. They've fallen through before. But, I think if we hear different speakers each month and the talk-a-thon is a regularly scheduled monthly event, it might work," said Shala.

Saga To Be Replaced

by Marla Holder

Saga food service, who has served Winthrop for the past 13 years, has been underbid, and will be replaced by Apicure, a firm based in Rock Hill, according to Dr. Mary T. Littlejohn, vice-president of Student Affairs, four of the seven bidders were eliminated immediately because of high cost, leaving Saga, Apicure, and Professional Food Management (P.F.M.).

The state sets certain standards and specifications to be met by the food service hired and requires that bids be taken to help determine which firm will be employed. Dr. Littlejohn stated that it is not Winthrop College that saves money by accepting a lower bid, but the students themselves, and added that money was not saved by cutting food service.

"No way would we tolerate any lesser service in food. If the quality goes lower, they (Apicure) are out on their own."

Winthrop could not hire the lowest bidder (P.F.M.) primarily because the state encourages the school to work with firms based in South Carolina. Dr. Littlejohn phoned several colleges across the country inquiring about the students opinion of the food services, and found no great differences between Saga, Apicure, and P.F.M.

However, she did find that service depended largely on the individual manager of the school. This year, for the first time, students will be allowed on the committee that interviews candidates for the position. Only S.G.A. officers or students recommended by an S.G.A. officer will be accepted on the committee.

Biology
Open House

The Biology Department of Winthrop College will hold its First Annual Biology Open House on the First Floor of Sims Building, Monday and Tuesday, April 19 and 20, from 10:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

The theme of the Open House is "Exploring Biology Through the Senses." Attractions will include live plants and animals, art works, continuous slide and film loop shows, class projects, biological displays, and sounds of nature. Slideshow topics encourage the entire realm of biology and include "African Animals," "The U.S. - East to West," "Human Reproduction" and "Flowers."

All students, faculty, staff, and community members are invited to attend.
Dear Faculty Members,

The 1976-77 JOHNSONIAN staff is making an all out effort to increase the readership of our campus newspaper next year. YOU can help.

TJ is considering the use of a Faculty Guest Editorial in each issue. The column will feature a different professor every week. The column cannot exceed 500 words in length and the professor would have a free hand in the subject matter of his or her column. During the editorial program, if you would be interested please drop us a note stating that you will participate next year. Send your letter to:

Part of the difficulty in the fact that Phelps Annex is being reserved for overflow men currently, East Thomson has many rooms for which its occupants. If these rooms were doubled up there would be much space. Those who feel Phelps Annex should be left for women. Any possible overflow of men could be put in Basscroft Annex. Thereby men would not displace women for the first time since men arrived on campus.

To the Editor

Congratulations to Alan Rash and his large number of students, faculty and staff who worked with him on Decision '76, I know that countless hours went into the Winthrop College Presidential Primary. The end result was a project of what any college campus would have been proud.

Sincerely Yours,

MARY T. LITTLEJOHN

Dear Faculty Members,

I've a case to make with a gate. Oh, but you've had trouble with gates for years. If they swing in I always tried to make them swing out because they way out of the ordinary I ended up going over them instead of through them. My Grandmother's gate was the only one I could ever tolerate because the boards were rotting and the paint was gone and it didn't ever latch. It just stood or rather leaned against a post looking very humble and that was that.

Now a gate can open the way through which one comes or through which one leaves which may be equally positive depending of course, where one is going to or coming from. And perhaps I could even deal with them civilly if not for two unearable traits that the overwhelming majority seem to possess. That is, a good many seem to be locked and every one I've ever seen was attached to a fence. And that always baffles me the logic behind having a gate at all if it is to be locked, a fence can handle this the simpler of the two. And if indeed the gate is unlocked, what good is the fence? At a large child the connection between the two was not altogether clear to me until the day when the gate I happened to be studying was unlocked before my very eyes by a fat, red-faced man with a bald head who immediately slammed it shut behind him and snapped the lock leaving me to think that only fat red-faced men could get through locked gates and since I believed myself to have very little chance of ever becoming one that glorious opportunity was to be forever denied.

As I grew larger the truth slowly dawned. People bought land, and people put up fences around the land the fences had gates that were for those people and not for meaningless strangers like me. Perhaps I became bitter from too often living on the outside of those locked gates, from realizing that the world was locked shut and you had to have a key to get in. Or perhaps I simply could not believe that anyone actually had the right to deny someone else a walk in the woods without the tiskesome task of climbing over spikes and the intrusion of NO TRESPASSING signs staring blankly from trees that I am sure had not meant to say that thing of all kind.

But the thing existed and so one seemed to be bothered by it. It was and is a way of living in this country and anyone who has the money to buy a few acres will tell you that I might even have managed to live with it competently enough had I not taken a ride with a friend one day who happened to live in a neighbor hood that happened to have a long metal gate at the entrance that was opened by putting a card into a slot. Only he had the card and I didn't. Even then I was surprised to see it move at all because in my eyes that cold steel was frozen shut.

I believe the people living in those houses have the idea they are locking someone out. But I wonder if in fact they aren't locked in. I suppose as long as some of us are on either side there's no way of knowing. But after years of longing to be inside, the clicking shut of that gate as we passed out was more than welcome.

Having just a few days ago written a very silly bit of babble as my final column for this paper, it occurred to me very shortly after the damage had already been done that I had allowed away my opportunity to go out on a genuine note. If you see, it has always been my main purpose in writing anything for this paper to focus some attention on the various aspects of our human nature which tend to wreak havoc against ourselves and our fellow human beings. I have to be one of those people who really does take all this bad stuff seriously but would rather handle this in an entertaining manner, being that the straight-from-the-shoulder method (never!) tends to turn people off. I find in retrospect that I have made one or two mistakes in the past by falling into an all-too-easy pattern of shooting from the hip; that is to say, using methods of banter and gimmick which are fine for some purposes but tend to be more of a misappropriation of newpaper than anything else. When they grow too far out of balance, I had hoped that the strength of this column would always be that it attempted to set up a one-to-one identification with the reader, hoping to lead the reader to realize his or her problems and personal issues may be as equal or greater degree throughout the entire spectrum of society. I always thought I could show people that it is possible to fight against the tyranny of myopic social standards and rutted thinking to become far more than other people would give them credit for. Since this is the cross of the matter upon which I have lost my thinking and living throughout this school year, I think this would be a good time to make one last restatement in that regard.

Being at a rather happy and easy juncture at this point in my life it usually takes something another person says or does to remind me of the far-reaching problems which surround us all. Listening to a conversation between a friend of mine and her sister brought to mind the questions which have bothered me for so long. She started talking about the frustration she was facing over having to do a four to six page rebuttal of a statement of opinion concerning a problem in social interaction. The statement followed a simple logical structure and drew from the one premise its conclusion. My friend stated to me what she considered to be a biased reconstruction of the statement. Indeed, both of us saw immediately the

Coeducation: A Worthy Four-Year Struggle

Nancy Donnelly

The campus of Winthrop College is growing everyday with a rise in enrollment of male students. Some males, those admitted in 1972, are now receiving degrees. However, the campus wasn't like this 10 years ago and the residents of Rock Hill, Winthrop College and the state of South Carolina will never forget the fight for change.

The great controversy in 1949 when the bill was brought up before the State legislature, actually was started as far back as 1916. In 1916, men were allowed to take courses at Winthrop College for credit with the stipulation that they could not receive a degree. However, in 1969 the tide changed. No males were allowed on campus unless they were guests. A poll was taken in 1963 by 55 girls from each class. Freshmen, Sophomores, Juniors and Seniors. Seventy-nine percent of the girls were opposed to coeducation. The Sophomores found men least desirable reporting them chiefly as odd jobs thieves. "The new male would have been a desirable reporting them chiefly as odd jobs thieves. "The new male " "The new male 'would have been " "The new male " "The new male " "The new male "would have been a desirable reporting them chiefly as odd jobs thieves. "The new male "would have been "would have been "would have been "would have been "would have been "would have been "would have been "would have been "would have been "would have been "would have been "would have been undesirable."

The responses of the Winthrop Freshmen in favor of the change were just the other way around. "I would improve classroom spirit," "I would better prepare girls for the outside world," "I would bring in added social activities and teach self-independence."

The flight began when 10 men were denied admission after 1969 had been accepted on an experimental basis. Because of rejection, the 10 men from York County took Winthrop College to court in hopes of forcing Winthrop College to open its doors to men. On August 24, 1970, a 3 Judge jury ruled that Winthrop College would remain an all girl's school. Eighty-eight percent of the college's students were women. Seventy-nine percent of the 10 men began to appeal the U.S. Supreme Court decision. The men complained that the charter restrictions barring the admission of men were unconstitutional and required the state to provide them equal protection of the law. The court rejected the plea saying that since Winthrop was a selective college, it was not obliged to admit men.

The enrollment of male students at Winthrop College was one of the factors that would make the college more competitive. Since graduation from Winthrop in 1966, however, she has completed two feature-length documentary films which have established her reputation as an accomplished filmmaker and feature producer. After completing her first feature film throughout the state last year as part of the South Carolina Arts Commission film circuit, she returns to the circuit this spring with her most recent film.

Winthrop Grad Part Of Film Series

Gretchen Robinson is the kind of Winthrop College success story that will never make the Wall Street Journal. Her monetary assets are few, and she has survived chiefly on odd jobs, handouts from friends and relatives, and eaten a lot of peanut butter sandwiches the past few years.

Since graduating from Winthrop in 1966, however, she has completed two feature-length documentary films which have established her reputation as an accomplished filmmaker and feature producer. After completing her first feature film throughout the state last year as part of the South Carolina Arts Commission film circuit, she returns to the circuit this spring with her most recent film.

She had recently completed a short film making course at the Greenville County Museum of Art, and says of that time, "If I'd known how much I didn't know then, I never would have begun the project." Gretchen Robinson will present "The People of the Sea Islands" on Thursday, April 22, at 3 p.m. in Kinard Auditorium on the Winthrop College campus. The lecture is invited and admission to free.

Mr. Robinson's appearance is part of the continuing Independent American Film Makers series sponsored by Joyner Center for Continuing Education, the Greenville Country Museum of Art, the Columbia Art Museum and the South Carolina Arts Commission.

Winthrop Grad Student Teaches Vietnamese Children

An American French teacher teaching English to Vietnamese children. It sounds confusing, but it really isn’t.

Marilyn Buddin, a graduate student in French at Winthrop College, has been hired in a federally funded project by Rock Hill School Board to help teach English to 10 young Vietnamese refugees.

The Vietnamese youngsters are from two families who escaped from South Vietnam in the final days before the fall of their native country. They came to Rock Hill last August under the sponsorship of Mr. and Mrs. Connie Grant of Rock Hill, who have taken care of them in their Rock Hill home.

The students, two girls and eight boys ranging in age from six to 16, are enrolled in local schools. Six are students at Ebenezer Elementary School, two at Rawlinson Road Junior High and one at Alexander Magnet Elementary.

Mrs. Buddin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Connie Grant of Rock Hill, met the students on a recent school tour. "It was so touching," she said. "We were so surprised when I first said ‘be quiet’ (in lang) and ‘listen’ (in deaf)."

Speaking one full sentence, including the verb, is still difficult for the students. The older students want a grammar rule for every usage, and idioms of the English language cause them a lot of trouble.

Mrs. Buddin also said the older students were always asking about slang words like “gomba” and “ya,” but “this adds to their learning,” she said.

"They are so enthusiastic and so eager to learn,” said Mrs. Buddin. “They want to learn even more than just what I teach them.”

She said the students were becoming Americanized. “Television has had such an impact. They know on which channels programs are seen. One day I told them wild animals didn’t like people, and they all hollered, ‘Except Tarzan.’”

Business School Growing Fast

Call it what you like—human relations, personnel or behavioral management. They all deal with managing human resources, and this is the area in which Winthrop College specialized, according to Dr. James E. Padgett, dean of the School of Business Administration.

"We know we can’t be great in everything,” says Dr. Padgett, “but we excel in this area to be the best in.”

Winthrop is located in the middle of an area where labor is the most intensive resource and the biggest expense for businesses and industry. With this in mind, Dr. Padgett, the Winthrop administration has geared its programs to aid area businessmen in managing people.

"The major thrust of our program is to become a first class school of business,” commented Dr. Padgett. "In order to do this, we must have a very strong academic program that aids students in getting good jobs.

"Also, it is necessary for our faculty to become involved in the business community,” he continued. "We must have an interest in the experience of faculty and businessmen, and we must have a continuous flow of training experiences and workshops for area businesses.”

The Winthrop dean said that before 1960 there were few business programs, “we must prove it in this area.” He thinks Winthrop has done all three.

With one of the fastest growing business schools around, the academic emphasis at Winthrop is high toward teaching a belief of theory and practice. "We’re a professional school, and we teach students to think and solve problems rather than how to perform on their first job.”

With a combination of theory and practical application, Winthrop is doing a number of things to develop this.

An internship program has been implemented in which students utilize skills and knowledge acquired in the classroom in working for employers needing their particular expertise. Not only does the student get paid for his work, but he also receives college credit.

An agreement has been reached with the Small Business Administration to provide management assistance for small businesses in this part of the state. Students investigate all areas of a particular business and make recommendations on how that firm might operate more efficiently and with a greater profit margin.

Faculty with both high level business experience and top academic credentials are being employed to provide students with academical instruction which has significance to the business world. Half the present faculty of 30 hold doctorates, and many have worked in some of the nation’s major corporations.

And the School of Business has become deeply involved in the adult education program through Joyce Center for Continuing Education, offering many practical workshops from a one-day secretarial training workshop to a week-long, specialized management seminar for a particular firm.

One might get the impression that there is nothing new and different for this man to produce. One couldn’t be more mistaken.

Among Lewandowski’s recent projects, two years in design and production, is Winthrop College’s new professional art degree, the Bachelor of Visual Arts, Design.

Dr. Padgett says that the major changes in Winthrop business programs—restructuring the curriculum and adding diversified new faculty members—have led to a 100 percent increase in students enrolled in business.

In the last three and one-half years, the undergraduate enrollment has grown to 500-600, and an additional 200 are enrolled in the Master of Business Administration (MBA) program, making it one of the largest in the state.

More than 80 percent of the MBA students are full-time employees in business, government and industry in this region, some of them commuting from as far away as Spartanburg. From 20-25 percent come from the Charlotte area, but the majority live and work in the five-county area of South Carolina.

Ed Lewandowski: Always A New Idea

He has created a commemorative stamp for the U.S. Post Office, the Pure Marquette Medal for Apollo 11 astronauts, and a giant mosaic mural for the Milwaukee War Memorial building.

One might get the impression that there is nothing new and different for this man to produce. One couldn’t be more mistaken.

Among Lewandowski’s recent projects, two years in design and production, is Winthrop College’s new professional art degree, the Bachelor of Visual Arts, Design.

Ed Lewandowski has been working on the B.V.A. since taking over the chairmanship of Winthrop’s art department in 1973. The 23 new courses scheduled to be added in the next five years have been designed to strengthen existing fine arts offerings as well as to add new programs of study in areas of graphics and advertising design.

"I feel very comfortable with the beginning of the program," says Ed Lewandowski. "It represents my past 20 years’ experience in the education of the artist and designer.”

Both at Layton and ‘Winthrop, Lewandowski’s dual background as an artist and educator has given him significant insight into the preparation of students for work as professional artists. He sees himself as both, and stresses the importance of bringing the professional into the classroom as part of the educational process.

When he is not involved in classroom instruction or putting finishing touches on the B.V.A., Lewandowski still pursues his own career as professional artist.

Next came the complicated process of listing exactly which facilities and equipment would be necessary to expand the program into the B.V.A. Another step toward implementation of the B.V.A. was setting up an exchange of information with other schools all over the country who have set up innovative art programs.

Unique to this area, the B.V.A. is already drawing inquiries from students and professionals, although official announcement have yet to be made.
On April 10, Sigma Gamma Nu hosted the annual High School Individual Sports Day at Peabody Gymnasium. Participating schools were Chester, Clinton, Mid-Carolina, Greenwood, Camden, Chapman, Hasley, Great Falls, Lugoff, Rock Hill, South Florence, and W Simmons. The high school students enjoyed activities as golf, ping-pong, badminton, tennis, swimming, diving, track and field, and archery.

According to Pam Bostain and Phyllis Cummings, co-chairwomen, the purpose of Sports Day was fun over competition, and to expose students to Winthrop. Ms. Bostain said "Sports Day was a tremendous success and many thanks were given to all who helped."

SHORT SHOTS

Intercollegiate Softball

Winthrop's softball team was defeated by USC 23-4 on April 13. Throughout the game, WC made some plays which sparked the team, but for the most part was plagued by mistakes. In an earlier game, USC narrowly edged Winthrop's softball team in Columbia on April 5. The two teams were evenly matched through most of the game. Winthrop's five runs were evenly distributed among Helen Clement, Judy Kirkpatrick, Pat Bailey, Robin Lowe, and Jeannie Bates. Judy Kirkpatrick was pitcher for Winthrop.

Intercollegiate Golf

On April 15, the women's golf team challenged Converse college on the Fort Hill Golf Course. This was their fifth head-to-head match of the season. Results of the match were not available at press time.

Intramurals

MEN

The WC men's intramural sports season is gearing up into the final weeks of the softball competition, with the Faculty/Staffers and Bluegrass Bandits leading the race. The Faculty/Staffers improved their season record, reaching the .500 mark with a 1-0 record. The F/S team took over sole possession of second place.

In other action, the Jupes lost their first game of the week, 14-13. Both teams displayed weak defenses in the game. The F/S team carried their first victory in as many games over the hapless Joints. The Joints dropped one position in the season standings, pushing them into third place with a 1-1 record. The F/S team took over sole possession of second place.

WOMEN

The WC women's intramural softball season had only one scheduled game for the week of April 9. The Misfits defeated the Sandlot Sluggers 16-13. The Misfits outlasted the Sandlot Sluggers in a high scoring contest that put the Misfits into the first place tie with The Ladies. The Sluggers dropped to second place in league standings with a 1-1 record.

obvious flaw in the premise and that her rehabilitating work had been completely dismissed by history. We will come back to this.

Later on the conversation shifted back to the Sallie case. Of all those involved who had just received word of a big promotion in his company. Everything seemed to be going on so well for years and that he was always dreaming of getting out. Well, he was just beginning to see that condition that he could hardly consider getting out because of his responsibilities and financial commitments.

It seems to me we have two nicely overlapping social situations which give rise to several questions. In both instances we find people locked into a "system" which allows for little flexibility for the persons involved, either on the top or bottom. The poor student never could the teacher with the faultiness of the assignment thinking that he is obviously more knowledgeable about such things and if not, then he is certainly more powerful. The management of such a company is caught in the grading system trap in much the same way. He cannot conceive of doing better in the world without having someone in a higher position there to tell him how unworthy he is doing.

"Why do intelligent, free-willed individuals allow themselves to drift into a situation where they are no longer the arbiters of their own accomplishments? Do we not have self-esteem and our own minds that we are doing a thing well and that we are needed and wanted by someone somewhere?" That is, there is that fewer and fewer of us are doing what we really want to do, and more and more of us are being absorbed into the impersonality of the giant corporation.

The tube, the news, our own sensations are all second hand to us now. We have tried and tried to place ourselves within us to the point where we can swallow more and more garbage without even bothering to weigh its merits.

Is a college education worth more than cutting a path through the Canadian wilderness? Is being the head of General Framis less than being the best motorcycle mechanic in Butte, Montana? If you out there are going to sacrifice your true self in favor of commercial gain or "security" much in the direction of the two basic premises, that we are and we are not "it" or "them" are the ones ultimately responsible. But, of course, we are all involved as an integrated society. We are a many little hollow subcultures of dare devils, in blue and black, and blues and whites and rich and poor and college and blue-collar, the Gipsies and the right-wing intellectuals and Protestants and Jews and the basis upon which our nation remains strong lies not in its way I shot this column down on several occasions in favor of the security of the formula approach and the gag line, then none of us are going to stand much of a chance. It isn't just ourselves we sell short on the cop-out. We all help reinforce each other's attitudes. We build welfare states and turn out second class merchandise. We write inferior books and go to see slick, sophisticated movies produced by a semi-literate, thoroughly insipid

Voter Registration Information

Due to interest created by the recent enactment of the Voting Rights Act, interest is being held on campus, there have been inquiries as to where one must register to vote in the November election. Applications for absentee ballots and absentee registration are available from local county boards of registration in each county. Students may register to vote in the November election by registering in person or by absentee registration 30 days prior to the election. However, these ballots must be submitted no later than 45 days prior to the election and not later than three days prior to the election. However, these ballots may be obtained in person anytime up to 5 p.m. the day before the election.

Room Registration Hassle

Room registration for the 1976 fall semester, held in second floor Dinkins, April 5-8, was disrupted Thursday, April 8 by what student housing committee chairman Marsha Hurd labeled as "human error." Students planning to live on campus were assigned sign-up times determined by semester hours. The long lines and confusion were the result of a misplaced time-sheet at the registration desk and a number of students going to sign up before their given times.

Monday, April 12, at 1:00 all freshmen who were to register after 1:00 p.m. returned to Dinkins and signed up again. "Everyone's going to get a room," Hurd assured. "If you aren't satisfied with the dorm you were assigned, you can sign a waiting list for your preference.

ATTENTION

A list of students who have made application for degrees for May 2 graduation will be posted April 19 on the bulletin boards in Kinard and Withers buildings, at the circulation desk in Dacus Library, and at the entrance to Dinkins Student Center.

Each graduating student is requested to check one of these lists for his name. Errors should be reported immediately to Academic Records, 101 Tillman.

W.D. Livingston Registrar

Director of Housing Edith Delia expressed regret for the difficulty and said, "Hopefully everything is settled now."

BSU Sponsors Events

The Baptist Student Union will sponsor a drop-in for all of the Winthrop maintenance staffs tomorrow, April 20, from 4 to 5 p.m. at the B.S.U.

"The B.S.U. wishes to recognize and honor a segment of the Winthrop population which goes virtually unnoticed. To these friends, we offer praise and gratitude for their devotion and service," said Jill Branyon, member of B.S.U.

Students, faculty, and the administration are invited to attend the drop-in.

The Baptist Student Union is sponsoring a Hamburger Supper for 50 cents April 22 at 5 p.m. and Vespers at 6:00. "Ballpark," a play dealing with decision-making, will be performed by BSU members. According to Elaine Knight, BSU spokesman, seniors will be honored after Vespers.

Summer Postal Service

If you are planning to attend summer school it will be necessary to go by the Post Office and reserve the same box you had this year.

According to Postmistress Susan Williams, all newspapers will be destroyed. Notify the Post Office before leaving about what to do with your magazines. Also check with the Post Office if a change of address is to be made.

Anthology

Positions are open for the staff of the 1976-1977 Anthology. Anyone interested may contact editor-elect Kathy Kirkpatrick at 323-4137. Students of Winthrop are encouraged to submit poems, short stories, essays, drawings, and photographs for publication next fall in the Anthology.
