The Christmas Spectacular

by Sue Taylor

It was a show that made Rudolph glow from head to toe.

The 6th annual Winthrop Christmas Program herald in the Yuletide season December 7, in Byrd Auditorium.

The Winthrop College and Rock Hill community turned out in full regalia with their finely attired with the largest and Best Christmas Show Yet! Boasting combined forces of some 300 performers, with the band bells ringing, brass quartet, woodwind, an organ, a dance theatre, and a full-chorded group song, staged and danced and packed a house in the name of spirit; Christmas spirit that is.

The show, a joyous season from the 30 foot glistening tree in the lobby to the pre-show brass quartet, garbed in lords-leaping attire, to the looks of anticipation on the faces of young and old alike.

Admiral a mass congregational Carol sing the performers made their grand entrance down the side aisles through a huge scenery-painted cathedral on stage.

Opening the show was the performance of the highly prestigious Winthrop Chorus dressed in black and blue backless, flowy skirt long gowns.

Following the traditional activity scripture reading by Bruce Beasley, the Winthrop Chorus and Dance Theatre shared their best moments of vocalized melodies, and choreographed movement.

The performers of a swank yacht club and Bing Crosby counterparts, the blue-blazed red-socked Rock Hill Elks Club bar-botted and reenacted their own vocal choirs.

Youthful voices of the Sullivan Junior High Choral Ensemble, aided by a port flutist were near on the stage.

Song, dance and musical instrumentation made a skilled marriage in the next number of "What Child Is This!" With church robes Winthrop Singers, and a muted guitar adding background touches, Joanne Lust--the Winthrop dance pro-fessor executed her body gracefulness to the music's mood.

Excerpts from belting to the flow the audience again raised their voices in mass song proclaiming the 2000 year old birth of the Christ child.

"Ringling in the season" described fittingly the next act. The red-clothed Saint John's Ringers pealed their way to the audience's hearts and tuned ears, with their own Christmas variation.

The illustrious Saints Claus editorial came next, narrated by Roy Flynn and orchestrated by the three-member Christmas Consort. Hearts of all ages moaned with the immortal Virginia in the reality of the truth of Santa Claus.

Two High School choral ensembles, the Northwestern and Rock Hill respectively, were next to raise their voices in tune.

Hastening the pace was the Winthrop Band in a cheery "Sleigh Ride" number. With the help of jovial Winthrop singers dressed as elves in green attire, Santa was beckoned in song.

Waiting in the eyes the jolly fellow made his entrance. In true Herbal Essences advertisement style, Santa descended from above. A flowered swing. Dance-clad in reindeer suit completions, with antlers, pulled Santa's sleigh into view for Saint Nick to make a soft landing. With a twinkle in his eye, Santa—unbearded known as Jerry Helton—added his own voice to the multitude with a tenor rendition of "Chestnuts Roasting Over an Open Fire!"

As the audience joined in chorus of five all-time favorite Christmas songs all the performers congregated on the stage. On signal from a verse of "White Christmas" a huge glittering tree descended to the stage surrounded by glistening tinsel from atop.

Combined choirs and the band ebbed to the finale remembering in numbers T.V.'s well-known King Family. The final verse of "Carol of, Carolling" and thrown syrupy snowballs marked the end of the grand show.

But the essence of the show lingered outside to the newly lit Christmas tree on the Winthrop lawn. Seen through the rainy mist and tick fog the star on the top still shone brightly through the night air as if to say: The Christmas spirit is alive and living at Winthrop College.

International Hero Is Interviewed

by Ron Layne

NORTH POLE— A flight into Canada, then a 24 day trip by dog sled to the only outpost on the land of the 'right jolly old elf'. The assignment: Get in touch with the man they call Santa, Kris Kringle, the man who really exists. The locale: The frozen north land where ice coats the mystical candy-cane trees, preserving their sweet goodness for Christmas time. Today, kids everywhere are turned on to Santa's behavior in last ditch effort to assure good presents arriving by way of the man who ranks number in stature than the president, the Pope and the Easter bunny.

He sits in an overstuffed chair, looking slightly overstuffed himself. Whistfully, he puffs on his pipe, the tobacco glowing, the blend smelling like peppermint and pine cones. Occasionally a snort,smooth fella puffs into the room, his ears pointed and magazines like a "wee dog." He, Santa, is known as a gentle soul, leaning from the window. "Oh, ho. Ho. He bellowed, wiping a tear from his eyes. "By the first of December, I have kids everywhere cleaning up their act, their room, even their dog if they happen to have one. That, my boy, is power. Do you realize that I possess more power than Henry Kissinger. It beggars the mind.

"And what about Dickie Nixon, Ta, ta, he could hide those tapes from congress, but he couldn't hide them from the all-seeing gift giver. He really paid for that this Christmas."

"You mean you didn't leave him anything for Christmas the year that Christmas?"

"Sick as ashes, and I was just thinking of doing so. You have to understand, kid, I was VERY disappointed in Dickie. You see, I'm the one who gave him the tape recorder to the first place and just look at how he misused my gift."

The jovial fellow explained, laying a finger aside of his nose and rising mysteriously above the chair.

"Yes, I can see where you might have been upset, Mr. Claus."

"Pleasy, call me Santa. You're still a kid in my book."

"Okay, Santa. I've noticed recently that more kids are claiming to have seen you in action on Christmas Eve. Any truth to those reports?"

"Lies, vicious lies. Those fellows at the paper are driving his away. They don't realize they could tolerate to intentionally forget to...the stereo they've asked me for this year."

"So, no one has ever really seen you shooting the good/bad rating...""

"But Jimmy Carter did get elected president."

"You're kidding! You mean...it wasn't the grand?" He questions, leaning forward in his chair. "Son of a gun, I'm even better than I thought."

"What do you mean, Santa?"

"Well, you see, kid, last year, Jimmy asked me for the presidency as his Christmas present. Since I'd only recently given him a government, I was unsure whether it was in my power to come up with the presidency. But, you said he got it, huh. No telling what he'll be asking me for next. Probably something ridiculous like world peace."

"Do you think that you are behind Carter's election?"

"Well, Jerry was a very bad boy last year. Jimmy was only my second choice. But then did you think a peanut farmer could become president? I told you, I've got power, with a capital P."

The Santa Clause

Ron Lyan

"Dech the halls with boughs of holly, fa la la, la la la..."

Ah, yes, it's Christmas time in the late twentieth century. Have you purchased your new day-glo, phosphorescent, revolving tree? Better hurry, our supply is limited, mail order only and, due to this incredibly low price, only two per household.

Say, does anybody remember real Christmas trees? You didn't get them in a Christmas kit consisting of spray paint, artificial mistletoe and spray merriment. Your dad would drag you off to a really neat field outside of town (now you can find the outside of town) and you'd cut a tree, take turns dragging it until you reached the car and use real water to keep it green until New Year's. What a joy it was. Nowadays, the words 'Christmas tree' bring to mind a trip to the store for a box that contains a stick with holes marked A, B, C,... that accommodate synthetic branches that act as a facade. That time of year has to be back into shape every year. So, don't forget to turn the tree back around and don't you dare bring the tree really lit up last year when the lights shorted out on the tree. Would you believe it? The lights are stuck on the same side of the tree. That tree probably isn't the only one with a mechanical short. None of those nice smelling pine needles? No, they're all gone. Not in January and remind you how nice Christmas was last year.

Artificial trees are just a small reminder that we live in an age marked by TOTAL TECHNOLOGY. Look at the Christmas toys we're offering the kids. We've got plastic dolls, spastic dolls (That one that has arms you can stretch and she catches the dog's neck), and spastic dolls. They crash through walls, flip you the bird and knock your paws off. Children, all with the flip of a switch. Dolls that used to lack certain parts of the anatomy are now needed. Santa is more believable than that story about three very intelligent men crashing around and gaze admiringly at some kids whose parents couldn't even afford a bed and had to stick him in a manger. It's hard for a kid to grasp the idea of a manger and a child the world calls the king of men, but any kid can tell you how Santa makes his sleigh fly. After all, if man can go to the moon, surely, some chubbie dude from way up north can conjure up some hybrid reindeer feed that will enable them to fly across a cold December sky. Since the guy has to work only one day a year and needs to get in a lot of work sleigh proposition and that sort of thing. Santa's not just a cuddly character. Santa lives! The kids believe!

Go ahead, ask the kids. They believe, and they'll tell you that you should too. You see, it's simple logic. If you believe, you can. If you don't believe, what's the harm? Nothing to lose, but if you choose to disbelieve, well, there's the rub. We are not ready for a Christmas tree with nothing under it for you on Christmas morning...

Just Ramblin...

Alan Rash

Christmas should be a time of reconciliation, thankfulness, and renewal-reconciliation because of the ideals represented in Christ's life—thankfulness because of freedom, peace, love and joy of Christmas are hard to sustain throughout the year.

For many people Christmas is a difficult time because death has taken someone who was loved during the year. Those with whom we are not acquainted face this reality every year. But death has been present all year, because it touched my life and the life of one of my closest friends.

Writing in this context reminds me of a young guy I was acquainted with from Greenville. Several weeks ago, he died. It didn't appear that he was driving to a touch football game. On the way he noticed a group of young kids without helmets playing objects is a vain attempt to free their football which was lodged between the legs. Since his father was an employee of a utility company he apparently had the skill to safely climb the pole and free the football. He was electrocuted--now his family has lost their father, mothers, sisters, relatives, friends and acquaintances. A pealing of tears for Christmas comes to mind. It is true that we need to reflect on cherished memories of these people. Through love and reconciliation renewed hope can be gained for more memories to be cherished in the future.

I am especially thankful this Christmas for my friends—including one who actually quacks also for my "other" friend who reminds me that I am sorta quirky sometimes. Pride makes it hard for us to see ourselves as we really are. (That's a "true fact" as my legal friend would say). Friends serve a dual role in this regard. They help us see how quacky we can be—then they serve to lessen the pain of seeing ourselves as we are.

Friends also bring out the very best in us—thanks for being such friends! Merry Christmas to my Hobbit friends. Merry Christmas to my Chocaholic friend, Merry Christmas to Charlie Brown. Merry Christmas Bart! Merry Christmas everybody!

Thought for the Christmas Season "Things are in the saddle and riding mankind" Emerson.

Letter To The Editor

To the Editor:

In behalf of the Winthrop College Cooperative Ministry (WCCM), I would like to thank you for the assistance you offered our Bisbee Task Force this semester. Your cooperation in extending press deadlines for the WCCM magazine and actual graphics to our Hunger Action Series (which appeared in the last five issues of The Jonesean) was helpful in our presentation of stories and issues of the Winthrop community.

WCCM is appreciative of your support and cooperation. We are looking forward to working with you again next semester.

Sincerely,

Ronald McDowell
What Are You Going To Do?

by Debbie Mollycheck

During the three or four years we spend working on degrees, the question of "What will I do when I graduate" lurks in the back of our minds. Even if we're too busy studying, working, or dating to think about it, parents, grandparents, spouses, or friends can be counted on to bring the subject up somewhere along the line. And so we're either forced to spill our life's ambitions or to come up with something that will sound impressive.

Often in school, we count down the years and days until graduation. We forget our careers to turn off the TV and study for a test that should have been taken two days ago. Occasionally, when we're inspired, we turn down an offer to go partying and we'll hike over to the library to write a paper a week in advance.

Sometimes the work is fun and challenging and we keep going just to see how much the body can endure. Other times we have to psych ourselves into believing that it's all worth the trouble.

So, for three or four years we endure stomachaches, headaches, and a few other illnesses, real or imagined, in order "to get a good education so we can get a good job."

For approximately 260 students who will be graduating in a few days, the question "What will I do next semester and the semester after that and..." has suddenly become a reality. Some have known nearly all their lives what they wanted to do, but others are still undecided or have only recently given the question much serious consideration.

Patti McAllister, who is graduating with a degree in elementary education, advises upcoming seniors who want to teach to take the NTE early, before practice teaching, and to start applying for jobs right away. Ms. McAllister said she would like to teach in the Charlotte-Mecklenburg area but because she was late applying, due to all her time being devoted to practice teaching, she will probably be waiting on tables or working as a cashier until a position opens.

On the other hand, there are Lucretia Davis and Donna Marlowe with jobs awaiting them. Mrs. Davis specialized in family and child development and will be working at Winthrop's Human Development Center as a social worker. With a major in political science and social studies certification, Ms. Marlowe said that she will be leaving for a teaching position in Spartanburg.

Another alternative to starting a career right away is graduate school. Some people go on to graduate school to delay having to make any concrete decisions about their lives. Others like George Raad and Joseph Martin, however, have set definite goals for themselves that require further studies.

Hoping to attend medical school as a long range goal, Mr. Raad has applied for admission in Sept. 1977 to medical programs in Charleston and Columbia. A biology major, Mr. Raad plans to work in a health related field, such as a hospital, until he is more sure of his September plans. He will also be taking a few courses at USC.

Mr. Martin, psychology major, has applied for the graduate program in social work at the University of Tennessee for June. From now on, he said that he will be looking for a graduate program.

Also, there is Glenda Wilson who will be at USC for a semester taking a certified Public Accountant review course. With a concentration in accounting and a degree in business administration, Ms. Wilson will be taking the CPA exam in May after finishing up her course work.

Marriage used to be considered another option for Winthrop females about to graduate. Margaret Wannamaker is concentrating on wedding plans for her Jan. 8 wedding. She said that she definitely wants to work and had been applying for teaching jobs in elementary education.

If it seems that everyone but you has made up their minds about what they're going to be doing with their lives, it may be nice to know that isn't the case.

Jamie Sleshech said that she is going back home to Spartanburg where she will continue with her part time job and will be applying for a teaching position. Dave Gill is also going back to Ohio where he will apply for jobs in computer programming and somewhere along the line he would like to teach tennis.

Finally, Gloria Byrd, special education major, tells us that, "No way! Physical education, are also applying for teaching jobs. Both said that they will probably work on a masters in a couple of years.

Some of us have general ideas about what we want to do, but many of us have no idea of what the risk of sounding like a worthy graduate. we leave with this: "What do you plan to do with your lives?" It's something worth thinking about.

Children's-Eye View

In the midst of papers, tests, and deadlines, it is hard to get the Christmas spirit. But don't despair, there is a small group on campus, the "little people", who have it and are spreading their cheer around.

To visit MacFeat Nursery to find out why we have Christmas and what is the number one request for Santa. Catherine and Julianne agree we have Christmas because of snow (there's always hope). The big reason was of course, "Santa gives toys to the children." However, Van thinks we have Christmas in order to have trees with lots of lights!

The next question was the number one toy each wants from Santa. The girls, DeeDee, Julianne and Catherine want baby dolls with Catherine's, having a stroller, of course. The boys had a little more variety. Alexander wants a toy boat; Brian, the Six Million Dollar Man; and Van, all kinds.

The most original requests go to Chelsea who wants a horse (the childhood dream), and Randy, a chainsaw and drill. Whatever your reason and your request, the "little people" of MacFeat wish you a Merry Christmas (with snow!)

On Wednesday night of this week, the hilarious comedy, "The Four Musketeers," sequel to "The Three Musketeers" will be shown in Tillman Auditorium at 8:00 p.m. Admission is $25 with a W.C. ID and 50¢ for guests.

‘This Is Not All I Think’

by Chuck Wyatt

Most of us have entertained the idea of writing a book telling exactly what we think about life. Gloria J. Roddey, a Rock Hill native and founder of The Aberdeen School has done just that. Her unusual and easy to read book is on sale at the Winthrop Book Store.

The book was dictated into a tape recorder during a three day bout with the flu. Ms. Roddey in her own foreward describes the work as “a kind of journal of thoughts, a collection of memoirs or attitudes on a variety of subjects.” Not surprisingly the book tends to be scattered and unorganized. It deals with her ideas about conformity, government, the “new morality”, women’s rights, and religion—a lot to compress into 134 pages.

The author is a highly independent thinker with firm opinions. Unfortunately, she is not always clear in explaining them. For example, at one point she had the audacity to say “now pays homage to the oldest cult in the world: phallic worship, without the modifying qualifications which Christianity originally provided.” Her defense of such a bold statement is that scientific research has disproved many of Christianity’s theological tenets. However, she doesn’t explain which tenets or how they have been disproved.

I have to give Ms. Roddey credit for her ideas about women’s rights. She makes well organized attacks on examples of inequality or sexual prejudice. And her explanations and reasoning are clear and sound. She is especially disenchanted with the Catholic Church in which she was raised. She states the idea of a priest or a woman who would want to be a priest is absurd. She sees male priesthood as “a certain projection of the male elevated to a state of administering the mysteries of life to women.” She says this leads to the concept of God as a male which she firmly rejects.

Ms. Roddey’s opinion on the “new morality” are also interesting. She is against liberated sexuality and feels it leaves the individual no choice. She thinks the “new morality” means one has to be sexually active to be considered healthy. I cannot see that as an accurate assessment of the “new morality.” But her views of sex may be distorted by her generally low opinion of men. She goes as far as to say, “I also now know that about ninety-nine per cent of all men on the face of the earth are perverted women haters.” She also has the “screwed idea that they “have a handicap or problem that keeps the majority of men from being able to see themselves in the proper perspective in the cosmos.” Ms. Roddey neglects to tell her readers what the “proper perspective in the cosmos” is.

All considered, I found the book interesting and sometimes amusing. I admire the author for making her thoughts public. But I don’t believe many people would enjoy reading it.

Basketball Preview

by Susan Roberts

The 1976-77 intercollegiate basketball team opened its season last Saturday with a scrimmage against USC-Spartburg. Later, the team will participate in the Carolina Christmas Classic at UNC-Chapel Hill, December 21-23. Winthrop will play Chapel Hill in the first round.

Coaching. Winthrop's basketball team for her second year is Linda Warren. This year's team will be composed of 14 players. At press time those names were not available. When asked about the team's strengths and weaknesses, Linda commented that our strength will lie in the experience of the players. "Many returning players have improved tremendously; and this should help us. Our major weakness is the lack of height among our players. This determining factor will be compensated by our speed and 'smarts'. But the absence of height will be a definite disadvantage to us against some of the teams in the state."

Winthrop's main South Carolina competitors are Winthrop, of Charleston, Clemson, S. C. State, Francis Marion, and our rival, USC. Most of these teams have relatively the same players as last year. Clemson will have many former Anderson players. Warren also said that because there are more teams in the state, you have to be selective of the teams you are to play.

When asked about the effect of athletic scholarships on Winthrop. Miss Warren said that this year, like last year, we will be hurt. Scholarships that will be available next year should help us stay in competition with top teams in the state."

Last season ended with an 8-12 record. "Last year was an adjustment period for the players and myself. This year should prove different," said Miss Warren. She is very optimistic and is anticipating a winning season this year.

SGN Notes

Each year around Christmas, SGN adopts a needy family in the Rock Hill area. The members collect canned goods, clothes and toys. The Christmas party for this year's family was Thursday, December 9, at the shack.

According to Susy McLellan, vice-president of SGN, the sophomore PEMs were in charge of the party. The main guest of the party, Santa Claus, made his annual appearance for the children. "Prior to the party, the sophomore PEMs took the children out to eat. They also brought the kids to Winthrop to play in the gym."

The money collected by all of the PEMs was used to buy each of the six children in the family a complete set of clothing. All in all, the kids and PEMs (some would call them kids, too, had a good time.

Gymnastics Team Limbering Up

According to Jane Bell, women's gymnastics coach, the intercollegiate gymnastics team will participate in five meets during the 1977 season. Twelve members and the manager and trainer compose the team. On January 22, they will travel to Carolinas for a tri-meet.

On February 4, Appalachian State will host a tri-meet between themselves, Winthrop, and Furman. The gymnastics team will give a demonstration for the Lancaster Recreation Association on February 12. The next week, Winthrop will compete against UNC-Chapel Hill and USC at Columbia. The sole home meet of the season is scheduled for February 25 with Western Carolina and USC. And March 5 marks the date for the state gymnastics meet. The location of the state meet is presently undecided.

Miss Bell expects very tough competition from Winthrop's opponents. She said, "all of the schools we compete against offer scholarships, except us." She said she hopes Winthrop will offer them next year to keep in step with the competition.

Home Ec Degree Useful

A degree in home economics can be most useful when it comes to finding a job, according to Dr. Carol Bocan, associate professor at Winthrop.

Students with majors in sports, nutrition and food science, textile merchandising, child development and family life are finding opportunities in the mid 1980's. Increased because of the continued diversity as the area of study. Dr. Bocan listed such examples as home economists in the food awareness to consumer quality, home service representatives, but in industries. Sbe continues: "we are becoming aware of the importance to participating in area communications, research, homemaking, consumer interests and legislation. "All are vitally important to everyone, because they actually touch the live of every person in some way," she says.

Preparing students for such diversified professions is a challenge for Winthrop's school of Home Economics, the center for training home economists in South Carolina.

"Our programs are no longer geared toward teaching preparation," said Dr. Bocan. "A home economics degree provides a good background for going into other areas besides teaching."

Also, with the recent approval of the education oriented school, "Dr. Bocan adds, "the number participating in the area of home economics is increasing. There were no multiple-death fires in nursing homes in 1975 for the first time in many years.

Second Showcase Presented

The Winthrop College Theatre presented their second showcase of the year, December 3 and 4, at 8 p.m. in Johnson Auditorium. The Cabaret Theatre was composed of 3-10 set plays directed by students.

The third play, "The Lemon" directed by Ron Connop of Rock Hill, was a humorous drama of sports with an "Arrenic and Old Lace'"-type ending. Don Saville as Mr. Dobby, Priscilla Galley, the student, made this the outstanding play, as far as acting goes. She was another veteran of the Winthrop theatre, while Galley, Catherine Love, who portrayed the said, are newcomers to the Winthrop stage. Entertainment during intermission, and title songs were provided by Dock Macdonald (alias Christopher Reynolds) and the Cabaret Chorus. Refreshments were also sporadically served.

The plays are the term projects of the student directors as a part of an advanced directing class taught by Blair Beasley. Beasley said the showcase series was the perfect forum to display what the students have learned.

first coming

a bloody mess has stained the stable floor a weak half-smile creeps bravely across her face
the infant crying, eyes shut stinky with birth lies in her arms

the first-born, the first near to the throne raises his tiny face
a sheep bleating, a donkey dreadfully out of place, much less the face

she, extending that frail
and emaciated
Yahweh has borne in pain
in watching her, can any
she cringe at the whole scene
generations of our hope great miracles are born anecdotally

christmas at the mall

you are mine, now, you know her half-smile glows
she weeps in delight
in watching her, can any
she cringe at the whole scene
she, extending that frail
and emaciated
Yahweh has borne in pain
in watching her, can any
she cringe at the whole scene

Pieces of furniture, paintings, and other art objects that have played some part in the history of Winthrop are presently being collected by Art Department Chairman Edmund Lewandowski for an exhibit, and possibly a "miniature museum." Lewandowski said many interesting pieces are scattered in various places on the campus. Anyone who knows of items that have "taken part in the history" of the college may contact Mr. Lewandowski at 322-276.
