Student Motivation And Communication:
We Can Work It Out

By Pamela Zagrolli

Next year's vice president of SGA, Dale Dove, actively campaigned for better communication at Winthrop College during the January elections. "I didn't have the answers," says Dove but the biggest social problem at Winthrop is communication. Students are not aware of campus happenings, especially day students, maintains Dove, since he, too, lives off-campus. Students find difficulty when looking for information. Information, in turn, is not channeled through the best sources. "Everybody was making decisions by the seat of their pants and consequently Dinkins has probably lost close to $30,000 within the past two to three years...concerts lost abt. at $28,000," says Dove.

Although students identify with particular groups and group interests, Dove reasons that general campus events do not attract the broader college population. "This is getting down to the specifics," says Dove. "What attracts people? What do they read and why do they read it? What important channels of communication will attract student interest?"

Dove sees Winthrop's communication gap stemming from two interacting problems: the image of the college itself, and a general fear among faculty, staff, and students to change the image. "We have to work on changing the image of Winthrop College. Many representatives and Congressmen still think Winthrop is not co-ed," says Dove.

He feels that change will be accomplished mainly by the student body who, individually or as a group effort, will write to their congressmen and invite them to Winthrop. In this way, he says, "so-called "outsiders" and "insiders" of the college will coincide. "Change will benefit everyone," foresees Dove. "We have to get out from under that glass bubble."

Banquet Honors Outstanding Students

A fantastic performance by the Winthrop Singers, directed by Robert Edgerton, was followed by McClendon's address. She spoke on how the aspect of human rights ties deeply with the literature of former years, and the stereotypes that literature portrayed.

Academic Amnesia:

"Dr., Is There A Cure?"

Academic amnesia is a state of mind induced by tired students who forget to prepare for the future. Very few students, if any, know their course and book requirements for next fall's classes. Students decide, through no fault of their own, also find them, and bookstores where a competitive book market exists.

A "course book" would also enable students to realistically evaluate their course load for the following semester. Many students just complain when they say,"I had no idea that my courses would be so difficult. I wish I had known." Awareness of course objectives and requirements enables students to determine whether or not they can handle their classes and possibly influence them in choosing a proper grading scale most appropriate to their course load.

"Course books" can offer insight into the realities of the following semester. Certainly not every student would desire or use this book since some are not as interested in their courses as others. Nevertheless, if these books were published, copies would need to be made available in the library and every department on campus. In this way, students and their advisers would be able to discuss, interpret, and decide which courses would be to the student's advantage at a particular time.

-Winston's Opinion Page-

This week's issue: The Attendance Policy

Do you agree with Winston's present attendance policy and do you feel professor's abide by it?

Gloria Roddick-Sr.-Day

"No, I don't agree with the attendance policy. It's put to you without your knowing about it. I think it ought to be up to you. If you want to go to class, go. If you can get by without going to class, good. It ought to be enough just to be there on the test days."

Paul Flee-Fresh.-Dorm

"Yes, I think it's a pretty fair policy as it is."

Carol Montgomery-Fresh.-Dorm

"I agree with the policy but professors don't seem to. It shouldn't matter whether or not you attend class, as long as you get the required work done."

Aron Whitman-Fresh.-Winston

"Just remember when they call your name, act surprised!"

Patti Garrison-Sr.-Day

"I think the attendance policy is fair. Attendance shouldn't be ground into you by your professors, but should be your own responsibility once you're an adult. Professors though, grade down for class absences, it's obviously done, but it's a subtle discrimination."

Dr. Gordon H. Ream-English Professor

"I feel the attendance policy needs to be revised. The present policy is a disservice to the students. It may flatten them but it's really detrimental to them. I don't think a student can get through my course without attending class, since I figure in the final grade as part of the final grade. That's why I'd like to see a maximum of three unexcused absences as part of the attendance policy."

JUST REMEMBER, WHEN THEY CALL YOUR NAME

ACT SURPRISED!
A S. C. Prophet Reflects Upon the Past

by Pam Zag모

The purpose of this article is to introduce the readers of TJ to Marion A. Wright who is and will be contributing articles to the paper this month and next year. He is S.C.'s foremost Civil Rights leader, outspoken opponent of the Death penalty, and a leading force for the attaining of American equal rights for all people. Much of Wright's work and several oral interviews can be found in Winthrop's archives.

Marion A. Wright, a young whopper in his eighties, is an articulate and indefatigable figure of the Civil Rights movement experience in the South. Born in the "Veitable Mecca of Southernism," Johnson, S. C., he became a leading dissenter against the state's impartiality concerning Black rights. From 1952 to 1958, Wright was president of the South Carolina Regional Council organized in 1944 for the precise purpose of attaining these rights. He was a "liberal" thinker long before the Civil Rights Movement existed. During the early part of the 20th century, according to Wright, "A popular opinion in S. C. toward schools and equal rights at the lunch counter were a rarity, to say the least, endangered, species."

He once ruled in every case of S. C. society. Leading political figures of the state included H. governors and a S. C. chief justices each killed one man. Wright has recently dictated that every S. C. governor must take an oath wherein he bound himself not to dued. Violence is an important segment of this state's history, and reflection upon our favorable biography aided the revealing of S.C.'s course from "the disagreeable aspects of the past."

A popular opinion is S. C. was basically, "to hell with the right of the Constitution." Such sympathy became apparent by action: between 1925 and 1926, 133 lynchings occurred in this state, "Reason and religion" brought about no change since. The State blasted lynchings in its editorials and paid dearly when one report failed at the hands of an assassin. Not one conviction result from the murder. Nevertheless, outspoken women's groups pressured law enforcement officials to force an end to lynchings. Consequently, the frequency of such murders lessened and eventually became a thing of the past.

While Wright was a student at USC (1910-14), he rejected the theory of white supremacy and argued that so-called superiority can be evaluated only by "individual attainments and excellence," without regards to race. His two main influences during his college years were Dr. Samuel Milbich and Dr. Joseph Mora. Milbich used a book by Edgar G. Murphy in his class entitled The Basis of Ascendancy, which firmly rejected the theory of white supremacy and the concept of a race. Civil Rights groups, Mitchell, who taught government, impressed upon Wright that "a state's obligation is to make no racial distinction against its citizens."

As a teenager, for nearly ten years he lived as a tenant of a farm from the home of the "Pitchfork Ben" Tillman. Tillman gained national notoriety as a follower for the white demagogues. Wright describes him as "an admitted racist of the worst kind" although he much admired Tillman's intellect. Wright has often been asked what his reaction would be if his sister married a black. His answer in the early 1900's, as it remains today, simply maintains "there is no compulsion on her to marry anyone and marriage would always involve pure personal considerations. Only the participants would have to evaluate for themselves or herself."

Wright has an infinite parallel between death penalties of the past and present. (Although capital punishment is not presently in use in the Carolinas, it still remains in the statute books and can be put into effect at any time.) During the 1700's, there were at least 129 crimes punishable by death while today there are only 11, both for murder. This does not include lynchings which occurred predominately during Reconstruction.

Wright maintains that over 75% of those recently executed were blacks which supports the theory that the death penalty is aimed at this particular group, as were the lynchings. Eventually, that dark, hidden segregation reaches the surface of our consciousness: whether the death penalty, which is "sophisticated and carefully planned," is any different from a lynching, which is both ignorant and crude in nature. Even public executions are a thing of the past; an entertaining event for friends and family to view. Within this century, executions are essentially hidden from the public since they are now "socially" considered, by many, vulgar.

Wright prophesizes that "increasing social consciousness," a product of the educated mass mind, will someday abolish capital punishment and "face the future without impediments caused by prejudiced points of view."

By Jacqueline Barber

"Everybody Will Die"

Someday From Something"

Most often it is a soap opera drama. One of the characters is told that he has a limited time to live. But, if one takes the time to contemplate, he has a "limitless" time to see how life is. Much or Wright's work is to imagine how Mary could be strong enough to endure this and still be active in everyday life. She said, "I believe I will in the 6 more years that I have. I should have a chance to see as much as I can and do the things I enjoy."

Her time is filled with school, hobbies, and friends in addition to her son. "Whatever I get into," she said, "I'd have to be myself. I enjoy companionship and I'm content with my friends. Winthrop plays a very big role in my life," Mary said with a grin. "I'm not the smartest person in the world so I constantly hit the books."

"I like to shoot pool and sometimes I beat some pretty good players. I sew a lot at home and a lot of my school clothes. I enjoy cooking and desserts and I love to tamper with meals."

Whatever it is, shooting pool, being a mother, going to school — Mary does it in a manner in which she seems to be a part of health, energy, and vitality. Her philosophy is, "Everybody will die someday from something. There's no need for me to worry about them. I've always known when the Lord will be ready for them. I'm no different from anyone else. I just happened to have raynaids."

Getting A Job/ How to Write a Resume

By Diane Walters

A resume will greatly influence the chance of getting an interview for the job you want.

"Writing a resume is not an elementary task. It takes careful planning and an organized format that will make you look attractive," said Dean Spain of the Winthrop College Placement and Career Planning Center.

"Attend a workshop to help you get started, or pick up quickly information on how to organize infor­mation to write a resume for the job you want. You may want to obtain a copy of the resume of a prospective employer. Present you qualifications in an even bolder decision concerning what to plan and further education that you may have completed. A major problem some people have in writing resumes, according to Spain, is stating career objectives which is an extremely important part of the resume. Some do not know what their career objectives are yet. Others narrow their scope so much that it may disqualify them to certain jobs.

To solve these problems, be general including all areas of interests. You may want to specify immediate objectives in comparison to long-term objectives. For example, you may like to gain employment as an accountant and eventually with a major organization. "This implies a motivation concept as well as a statement of what you would like to do," said Spain.

When stating references in a resume, Spain suggested a time­saver that will eliminate the problem of your references not reaching an employer. Instead of waiting for individual references to be sent an employer, you may have references on file in the office of Placement and Career Planning. On request a copy of these references will be sent to your prospective employer. This quick convenient method of obtaining references will be important if a job is in a rush to be filled.

Once the basic content of what you want to say is organized, the next step is to present the material in a clear, readable format. There are a variety of ways to group the information into a workable format. For example, to organize the facts concerning work or educational experiences, you may use either a chronological style or functional style.

In the general or chronological style, according to a format from Placement and Career Planning, each job or educational experience is treated separately, working back from your most recent job. Under each any functions performed.

Another method is to group information into functions of areas of competence. Under each activity, list skills, accomplish­ments and other qualifications pointing out the functions you are able to perform well. A major factor concerning all information included in the resume is that it should be attractively typed. Misspellings, strikeovers, smudges, "uneven" margins, careless grammatical constructions should be avoided. "Any of the above may prevent the reader from considering the content," said Spain. "An employer may feel that this person is really not interested in the job or that he has other interests that are more important. In essence, the potential interview has been lost.

Spain also said that if you need help or have questions about drafting a resume, come to Placement and Career Planning in Bancroft Hall 142 or attend one of the resume writing workshops.

Organizing a resume is a step toward getting a good job. Take advantage of your skills and qualifications by present­ing them in a way that will make you look good to a potential employer.

Wrestling-Badminton Tournaments Held

The Intramural Men's Wrestling Tournament wound up at Winthrop with heavyweight Mike Evenson pinning Hal Carter in the first round and then pinning Tim Hyder for the championship in the 200 pound class. Mike Wylie in the 170 pound class was unopposed and took the trophy for that division. Boyce Lesslie pinned Roger Neely in the 160 pound class, and Jerry Martin (130 pound class) and Arthur Grace (150 pound class) were also unopposed. In the best match of all weight divisions the 140 pound class saw Johnny (Hogwild) Schwartz beat Ricky Neal, 7-4. This matchup, according to Coach Dennis Brown, Wrestling coach and Director of Intramurals, was very good and both Schwartz and Neal gave each other a real tough time. The Tournament will be held again next year and is open to any male student at Winthrop. Trophies were given to the winners in each weight division.

Intramural softball is going strong and will continue through next week. A Lander College-Winthrop College match is being planned but a date has not yet been set.

Smoocher Kisses Old Record Good Bye

(CPS)—An Indiana University, Penn. student put his mouth to the test recently in an attempt to raise money for a buddy who broke his back falling from the roof of his fraternity house. He kissed 3,125 women in eight hours, breaking the previous Guinness-recorded world record of 3,000. His comment: "This is the greatest day of my life." One co-ed who paid an undisclosed amount for a kiss "thought it was a terrific idea. All the kids were finally working together to do something for someone."
Woody’s Glory Bound

Ron Layne

"Bound For Glory", the autobiography of Woody Guthrie, is now on sale at the Winthrop Book Store. First published in 1943 and recently made into a movie starring David Carradine, the book offers a rare vision into the gits of the American nation.

Woodrow Wilson Guthrie was born in the rural midwest and reached adolescence just in time for the depression. After his family turned to dust, Woody began traveling the length and breadth of our country by thumb, freight and foot. As a part of the hobo subculture he is able to communicate the essence of that rich period of American history. The book was written about the common man’s struggle for survival. It is filled with stories of police persecution, fights, hunger and cold, but throughout it all Woody’s dauntless sense of humor rings an optimistic, ridiculous joy of living that is contagious and inspiring. Woody received little formal education and his writing style is much like his songs: simple, direct, and folksy. Although his grammar is often poor his language abounds with rich images and fresh adjectives. And some of his analogies, like the time he walked out of an audition at the prestigious Radio City Music Hall, "are unforgettable..."

His songs are familiar to almost everyone and "This Land Is Your Land" is practically a second national anthem. Woody travelled with Pete Seeger to the mining camps helping organize the unions. He stands as a spokesman for the down trodden everywhere and leans toward socialism.

During the book he dwells on the harshness of capitalism. Though written with simple words and common guitar chords his music expresses the problems of the system. "As through this old world I wander, I’ve seen many funny men. Some will rub you with a knife, some with a sunshine", he wrote.

Woody is a book that is short and easy to read and a must for anyone desiring a deeper appreciation of our heritage.

"It's not bad."

"I did it, because a friend had leukemia." My father had leukemia.

"I just felt the needle had leukemia."

"I did it because I had leukemia."

I participated in giving blood on April 6 or 7, you probably heard or said just about the same thing. On Wednesday April 6, 158 pints of blood was shared; not far from the goal of 175.

Margaret Godbold, chairperson of some 50 volunteers, that helped the Bloodmobile project, said "I find that most reasons people do not come is fear; if they know more about it they'd come because there is a desperate need for blood daily. We generally have five or six bloodmobiles out each weekday to try to collect the 850-900 pints needed for this area."

Contrary to popular belief, few people are turned away from giving blood. Usually, the reasons people are turned away concern having taken antibiotics for a cold, had ears pierced within the last six months, blood pressure abnormal, etc. At Winthrop on the first day only 2 persons were not allowed to give blood. For those that do the knowledge of helping someone is well worth the blood they give. Doctors and nurses check blood donors throughout the phases of giving blood. The donor registers, has temperature, pulse, hemoglobin, and blood pressure checked, gives higher medical history, picks up a bag, and has a drink of orange juice. Then the donor is escorted into the donor room to give the blood. Afterward, the donor can relax with coke, milk and cookies. Unfortunately, each year the need for blood increases and only 5% of our population is blood donors. Technology is making advances in blood use. The blood given in Rock Hill is shipped to the Carolinas' Piedmont Blood Center in Charlotte, N. C. where it is typed and processed. Usually in 48 hours, area hospitals receive the blood. The shelf life of this blood is 24 days. Some people have antibodies in their bodies that are only compatible with the same antibodies as well as blood types. The platelets in people's blood can be extracted in the Bloodmobile mobile laboratory. There is now a process that can freeze the blood platelets for two years. These platelets are important in surgery to insure proper blood clotting.

Blood donors can give their blood once every eight weeks. Any time on Sundays from 1 to 5 p.m., persons can give at the Blood Center in Charlotte.

Senator Sings

by C. L. Hayes

Senate convened April 6 at 7:00 p.m. in Dinkins.

Presiding over Senate, Patricia Sills announced President Vall's decisions on bills sent to him earlier. Shila said of the bill allowing students to make up work missed during the Special Olympics, that "Vall didn't sign it, but sent a copy to the Deans", and she had "acknowledged it."

Students were discussing the bill that will change the open house policy; it will be up to Dr. Littlejohns to make revisions. The Senate passed the charter for Epilepsy Theta, after a short discussion concerning qualifications for becoming members.

The Academic Senate Committee is considering a bill that will require rising Senior's schedules to be checked for degree requirements by their advisor and the Registrar's Office.

Dope In The Heart Of The Mississippi-And Legal Too!

(CPS)—There are five and a half acres of potent marijuana being grown, maintained and distributed by the Civil Service and the whole thing is perfectly legal.

The Mississippi Program, as it is called, is operated and supervised by the government, and is officially under the pharmacognosy department, whatever that may be. The point of the program is one Dr. Coy Waller, who, incidentally, developed the sequential birth-control pill.

The U.S. government has been raising the weed within walking distance of the University of Mississippi and the whole thing is perfectly legal.

The Mississippi Program, reportedly has a budget somewhere between $250,000 and $300,000 a year and the project has been around since 1971.

That could prove to be a very expensive high.

The scholarships, worth up to $3,500 annually, cover the cost of tuition, fees, books and room and board.

Truman scholars must be rising college juniors in September of 1977. The scholarships must be earning a baccalaureate degree program that will prepare them for some aspect of public service employment.

Hark, the Holy Hamburger

(CFS)—A University of Michigan anthropologist is suggesting that McDonald’s, far from being just another greasy burger house, may in fact be an edifice where latter-day American agnostics come to worship.

“When we go in (to McDonald’s),” Conrad F. Kottak observes, “our surroundings tell us that we are in a sequestered place, somehow apart from the variety, tempers and variability of the world outside... Uniform attire is worn by the agents of McDonald’s behind the counter... From the rolling hills of Georgia to the snowy plains of Minnesota, with only minor variations, the menu is located in the same place, contains the same items, and has the same prices.

“The neophyte customer who dures to ask ‘What kind of hamburgers do you have?’ or ‘What’s a Big Mac?’ he concludes, “is as out of place and ridiculous as a chimpanzee in a Roman Catholic Mass.”
