Winthrop Day By Day

Dear: Up-thr not to breakfast, but thence to the Hall of Kinard, and to muse over the state of War in China, and the drastic supply of water in the state of California. Then back, and to await the emanation to the "Life of Alexander Pope" (Was unable to learn anything of his loves, however); To Bachelors, consequently, to air my views on that remarkable fellow, but, somehow, they never quite came down to earth. To Carnegie's Endowment to acknowledge the literary efforts of Cassius J. John Durbach and "The London Charivari"; Then lunch, and thence to make my third attempt at this thing called skating—Came rolling home with a painful knee which had changed his color scheme, altogether—And they call it fun!

Editorials and Features The Johnsonian

FRIDAY, MARCH 11, 1933 EDITORIAL COUNCIL EDITOR IN CHIEF... BUSINESS MANAGER... ASSOCIATE EDITOR... ASSISTANT... ADVERTISING MANAGER...

BUSINESS STAFF Business Manager... Advertising Manager... Circulation Manager... Helen Moore...

I thought it might be fun rampaging the campus back through the years; want to go along with you... We find that our sisters of 1908 felt the same about things as we do today. Here's what one of that class had to say:

WITH A YEAR AHEAD OF US—

With a year of weekly Johnsonian that must be planned, assigned, written, and edited ahead of us, we dedicate this, our first one, to the past staffs of The Johnsonian. They, our predecessors, have already decided our major policies. These we will follow because we would be making a mistake not to follow them. The time has come to reap a reputation for accuracy, thoroughness, and fairness in covering the Winthrop campus' expresses all that we could want to do or hope to do. As it has guided ten staffs before us, so will it be the "Golden Rule" of the 1933 Johnsonian staff.

Those other staffs have determined more than general principles for us; they have maintained professional standards of excellence that we, almost novices at the game of journalism, are determined to pass. Ours is the task, then, of keeping a good newspaper good and this is our fondest hope of making a good newspaper better. We want to express a personal opinion, yours. This is your newspaper, you 1,470 girls in blue. We want to make Winthrop a more ideal school. Surely, Winthrop is our school. The Johnsonian therefore, is a service institution, and with that idea in mind always, we greet you, Winthrop readers.

GREEN TABLE—USED CAR WEEK—WALLET?

The Jones Ballet... 12 European countries... a green table... dancers from Germany, from England...

land, from Hungary, from Denmark, and Poland dancing in deadly serious irony the same dance that their own countries danced so tragically twenty years ago... It was a play with perspective—twenty years had taught a great deal about wars and men that make wars.

So Germans and Englishmen on the Winthrop stage joined their hands and their bodies, their minds and their prayers in one dramatic appeal for international peace. They meant that dance with their whole souls. Together they danced the honors of war, of death-war, of profiteers, and of war-aftermath. "Would that all nations might bind themselves together seeking the common good as we have become one through our art," their rhythm kept saying.

National Used Car Week—a speaker over the national hookup for fifteen minutes Sunday night—Fords, Packards, Pontiacs, and Plymouths—all promoting harmoniously a program for general business improvement—these and Plymouth corporations realizing that the American market—the only market—is flooded. Something must be done. Together they are doing something—not alone do they fight, cutting each other's throats, or at least their own prices, but together they face a nationwide calamity. They have found the way.

A Winthrop classroom in Kinard hall—pupils in Miss Patell Dowell's Education 59 class watch lantern slides of Grecian life and culture thrown on a screen by Dr. Donnis Martin, head of the ancient languages department.

New methods in education—no more of this strenuous, disastrous-in-intensity competition between each and every department—a feeling of mutual helpfulness—"We're glad that we can help you out"—integration—Since the joints of our piecemeal education ladder were alarmingly weak, the ladder was worth little. It took a long time, but we have found the better way.

1,470 Winthrop girls pursuing 1,470 different courses—courses crossing, courses tangled, courses conflicting—but all eventually headed in the same general direction—each girl probably unconscious of how much she could help the others—each girl missing sadly what the others could give her. And when, and only when, we do realize—as the other international, national, and local forces have realized—the better way of success through cooperation, can we really begin to accomplish the thousand and one things we want to accomplish.

YOU HAVE A VOTE—USE IT!

Tuesday Winthrop is going to the polls. Usually when Winthrop gets ready to choose its leaders for the coming year, the competition is high-grade, exciting—and close. Tuesday will be no exception.

Whether you realize it or not, each individual voter—freshman or senior, from Pickens or Parris Island, English or commerce 'tis no matter—has an enormous personal responsibility. She must see that her choice has already been nominated. If not, she must see that she gets nominated. And if our Miss W. C. Voter has no choice, she must set about in a most methodical, conscientious way toward procuring one. Finally on Tuesday she must get a ballot and vote for her choice—Ours.

In looking over the field to decide how to cast your vote, don't let yourself be swayed by noisy, bragging politicians. We haven't seen or heard of any "dirty politics" yet, but along about Monday night these soap-box orators will be running wild. They always do.

Mostly they'll be running over the freshman dormitories. (Freshmen usually promise votes easily.) You 600 freshmen may as well realize right now that you have the power to decide any election you want to. Frequently four or five of your votes do give a girl her office. Since you don't know the candidates as well as the upperclassmen, be careful that you pick the right girl—the girl you want to lead you, the girl you want to represent Winthrop.

For, however the elections come out, the winner will stand for Winthrop to the outside world. She should be worthy of Winthrop and she should be chosen by Winthrop—by hundreds of Winthroplians.

She will have neither qualification if you, 1,470 voters, fall down on your job. She will be nothing except a "figurehead" whose friends made the most promises for her." (And on the eve of an election, politicians will promise anything.) So, value your vote, weigh it seriously, use your own opinions, and vote for yourself and Winthrop. Yes, you have a vote—use it!

On sweaters and blouses and hats and bags and shoes and coats... you would be truly the very latest in sleeveless gowns. At least I think they're awfully; they have an "inert" look about 'em and, at first glance you have to stifle a yell that it's a new sign that you have the best thing object.

Runners up to the insect family are craps and, when Mr. Shakespeare mentioned that they had jakes in their heads (though heads I mean), I'll bet dollars to doughnuts he didn't dream you'd be wearing 'em for ornaments. On this campus of the Palms, Flowers—er—this is your newspaper, you 1,470 girls in blue. We want to make Winthrop a more ideal school. Surely, Winthrop is our school. The Johnsonian therefore, is a service institution, and with that idea in mind always, we greet you, Winthrop readers.

And speaking of cravens, how about boleros, sashes to match and, as we observed on one female fashion, a turban in a like manner! You'd be surprised at what a hit they give to—well, say a hairy dress, a shimmering rayon suit of us have 'em. A lot of brightness does powerful much to bring out the possibilities of a uniform.

And then there's slippers! Slippers and more slippers—pink ones, big ones, long ones, short ones, little ones, big ones, red, green, yellow, black, white, and they all have cute gaudy to be slipped by. They could be more fabulous than a jeweled spider dangling on a zipper pull or a fax, red apple or some of the million and one queer baubles and odds—oh my! But there's variety enough to go around in fifteen times fifteen hundred girls!

Speaking of the latest reminds us of the questionnaire being circulated by the Davidson magazine, Scripts and Franks. The lads seem to be viddy, viddy interested in what we think about. And now we have a new service, medium, or well-done. (Personally, I like ours well-done with a request dash of this and that.) After washing several hundred slides (as you dreamily into space) and write on their ideal man or bit vicinity on their pencils and commemorate their pet babies—we could give you the list, but of course we won't steal Uncle Thurston.

Personalities

MARTHA ORR Formerly of the upper right hand corner of The Johnsonian... seems funny not to see her there now, but her style and her whimsies will be personal as we say, immortal! ... Practically a senior from Anderson who transferred from Anderson Junior college for junior year... has an unusual knack for being a president... was president of her class for six years...

one in high school, two in college... president of the Writers' club and chairman of Standards where she represents Sigma Omicron Delta... Personally, she's famous for her polite, her friendliness, and her smooth, calm temperament... is sweet without gushing, capable without being a "stud," and strong without shouting it.

Freshmen Look At Winthrop In New Light After One Semester

BY ELIZABETH BALZINGER "I had such a good time I don't have time to get homesick," said Betty Richardson, Winthrop freshman, when asked what she thought of the annual Freshman Week. These rugged freshmen were more quickly adjusted to college life. Freshman Week is sponsored by the Y with credit due the chief Freshman committee and co-workers for the success of the week. These freshmen are always near to help and advise new students. They plan the program and see that the plans are carried out in the most efficient way possible. These "Ask Me"

Cullings

"American college students have long been noted for the limitation of their vocabularies, but it now appears that their ignorance is not the only controlling factor. A survey recently compiled by J. M. Steadman Jr. of Emory University, Atlanta, reveals that new students brought to campus with them a vocabulary of words which they consider unmanly or effeminate. There is a horrible fear of using of feminine words," says Mr. Steadman, "but no labors on masculine words."

"Among the words the boys don't like are listed the following: abhor, adoration, deal, charming, chic, cunning, cute, dainty, dazed, der, delicate, delightful, divine, dolly, dreadful, ducky, enchanted, exquisite, giggle, glorious, good, goody, gorgeous, gracious, grand, heavenly, heavens, limb, love, lovely, marvelous, marvelous, naughty, codine, precision, simply stunning, sweet, and thrilling.

"There are a lot of good words in that list, some of them indispensable, but as long as 70 per cent of them are not commonly used when in conversation the virility of the male sex will probably remain little. One cannot help wondering, though, what words these rugged freshmen will use when they start writing love letters."

—From M. Y. Times

From PHYLLIS

Dear Aunt Judith, Of course the family and I always thought you were a very-day wonder, and I knew all about how awfully out-standing you were when you came up here; but, honestly, I just don't see how Miss Russell can remember—not that I'm referring that you're that old, but it was a long time ago. I was writing the fourth grade over when you were a girl.

"What I started to say is that every time I think about you, she stops and wants to know all about you and how you are and are you still teaching. Honestly, I can't see how she remembers all she does. You remember that Angela built my first sweater you gave me Christmas? Yesterday was so perfect and spring was here, and everything was just too beautiful for me to enjoy life with myself shrouded in navy. In spite of warnings from the roommate and others vitally interested in my well-being, I put on the sweater. All morning I dodged nuthin and you, and successfully, too. But right after classes I found a letter from Johnny in my box and I was so impressed (albeit in hiding out just why he'd happened to write in two weeks that I forgot all about the sweater. I felt somewhat top me on the shoulder and say, "My dear, you can't." My heart sank, and I knew fate was against me. I was back in my girl.

If you're still in your good senior, you come up for "Junior Politics." Rumor has it that everything is the best yet. Anyway if you come, I'll have a ride home the next day. Can we take a day, too? Your loving niece, PHYLLIS

Roaming The Campus

In addition to familiarizing herself with the campus and becoming adjusted to college life, freshmen meet hundreds of girls and make innumerable friends during the first week. A conversation on the way to the snack or standing in line for physical examinations which reveal similar likes and dislikes, common friends and acquaintances, often turns into a life-long friendship. Best March, senior from Edgefield, is chief Freshman counselor this year and the counselors are: Leslie Tuten, Edwinton Ham, Ruby Meeks, Lucille Hoveton, Paschua Watkins, Ann Brown, Margaret McMillan, Elizabeth Ralwater, Nancy Black, Elizabeth Kallehan, Evelyn Connelly, Lois McCormick, Christie Ruby, Jean Kennedy, Totie McMillan, Ann L. Thomas, Ethel Howe.

1933 came out with the most famous of famous Last Words: "I just tore this page out of the encyclopedia, Miss Deane. I hope you don't mind." "Oh, Miss Hall, I've decided to change my major from English to physical education."

And now back to our own campus of today as we hear Ann Clarkston's: "In the probation class there are some girls. Of course they keep them in cages unless you. Now one little fellow (poor little thing) didn't see his Williams as he took a fling. Now he regrets in the ground. And the class believes his 'death' profound."

Stapped at her desk in the secretary's office, Miss Eve. Hixson looked up from one of the many things she does as secretary to President Phelps.

Janitor Reveals Stocks Hidden in Main Basement

BY MAUDINE WARD
Half buried under discarded pipe and lumber in the only unfinished room of the basement of Main building at Winthrop, almost as if hiding in shame, stands an old wooden chest, used as a means of punishment to the court laborers from the state penitentiary who helped build the college in 1866.

Will Thompson, who has been a janitor for fifteen years in Main building, is a familiar figure to all Winthrop girls. He doesn't talk much. But if you ask him a question about Winthrop or Winthrop's history his blue eyes sparkle, and he's ready to tell you almost anything you might wish to know.

We came upon him as he swept the eastern end and I jumped to answer our question: Was it true that there are still stocks where the men who built Main building were placed for punishment.

"Yes, ma'am," Will replied and put up his hands to show us this interesting place.

We followed him to the junk room across from the Johnsonian office. He turned on the light, cleared away some old pipe and pointed to a tiny wooden structure that looked somewhat like a mantle piece. The stock is braced with two heavy pieces of plank that run the same wall to the ceiling. The shabby structure was divided into two sections.

"Put your hands in these holes here and I'll show you how it works," he directed.

We slipped our hands in, and with one quick gesture Will pulled down the top board and fastened it. Our hands could not move and the loud pressure of our wrists.

This is where their feet were chained to the wall while they were being whipped," Will said, pointing to the stone wall near the ground level of the hole, where the chains had been fastened directly underneath.
