Dance Concert Highlights Six Faculty Choreographers

ROCK HILL, S.C. - This year Winthrop Dance Theatre in Concert is presenting the work of six faculty choreographers – three men and three women – in a series of performances in Johnson Theatre. Performances will be Nov. 9-12 at 8 p.m. and a matinee on Nov. 13 at 2 p.m.

The two artistic directors, Sandra Neels and Mary Beth Young, each have created three new pieces for this event. Neels’ work includes a contemporary pointe piece for 13 dancers, a theatrical work for eight dancers based upon a short story she has written, and a collaboration with faculty sculptor, Shaun Cassidy, for 11 dancers.

Young’s works include an aerial piece for eight dancers, a new work for four women and four men based upon weight-bearing partner work and an unusual piece in which the dancers are engulfed in bags of shiny fabric. Stacy Garrett-McConnell has choreographed two new contemporary works: one involving the physical manifestation of images of the mind and emotions and the other a distortion of a family portrait. The male choreographers on this program will be represented by the new chair of the Department of Theatre and Dance, Andrew Vorder Bruegge, as well as new artist-in-residence Jack Kirven, and adjunct faculty member Eddie Mabry.

Vorder Bruegge will offer a suite of early dances for an ensemble of eight dancers dressed in period costumes from late 16th-century Italy and France, to include the Spanish pavanne, the Canario, the Bassa Gioiosa, and the Allegrezza d’Amore. Kirven, an avid "post-modernist" has choreographed a pure movement piece based on a complicated "chance" system. Mabry’s jazz class will perform one of his new works which is upbeat and theatrical.

The program of 11 pieces promises variety in both choreography and musical choices, said Vorder Bruegge. Tickets are $5 with a Winthrop I.D. and $10 general admission.
