THE OFFICIAL PUBLICATION OF THE STUDENT BODY OF WINTHROP COLLEGE

VOL. 18, NO. 36

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.00 A YEAR

Editorial Asides

Women are supposedly no talkative men. Personally, we doubt this and could name several overly loquacious men. By silence, please the way, do you know the percentage of lecturers and political speakers who are men?

The musical quotation of Ingram Crosswell which brought up this subject is "The splendor of Blonnie—of more-petted hills and of less—another favorite in 'Blonnie' is the woman who, having nothing to say, sustains completely from saying it."

The end is fast approaching. This seems to center upon original steps, term papers, exams, and a semester of camp, job, home, summer school vacation. Those who are now carrying dark glasses and dark books and cream sessions are replacing Jean opinions.

Seniors are getting sentimental and underclassmen are wondering what Winthrop will be like in the next year without Lib, and Ikeops, and Eugene, and all of the others. Why do plans and people always seem dear when one is about to leave them?

Miss Manda had speaking: "I can always tell when a student is not listening to a class." Day Dream? lecture by the winking eyes, and the 'faraway' expression on her face.

"One day I saw one of my pupils slip away into her own thoughts. It was tempting to bring her back to the class distracted but finally decided to leave her to her dreams."

"I am glad now because she brought on a beautiful poem a few days later which she said she had composed in my class that day."

Senior Assembly Plans Announced by Jean McLaurin

Nora Morgan To Be Testator; Senior Order To Be Named

Plans for Senior Chapel, the farewell assembly of the Class of 1938, have been completed with the election of Nora Morgan as Class Testator according to Jean McLaurin, senior class president. This assembly on May 23 opens the Senior Week program.

Elizabeth Cross, organist, will play the processional while the seniors, dressed in caps and gowns for the first time, march into the auditorium as the other classes stand. Jean McLaurin will read the devotional after which Nora Morgan will read the last will and testament of the seniors.

The president of the class will present the gift of the seniors to the College.

Briggs Anderson, president of the Student Government, association will announce the nine new members of Senior Order from the rising senior class.

A new feature of the chapel service will be the presentation of the Publications W to seven seniors for the most distinguished service to campus publications.

PUBLICATIONS BOARD WILL PRESENT PINS

Award For Service To Be New Feature Of Senior Chapel

Recognition for those seniors who have rendered the most distinguished service to campus publications will be given this year with the selection by the Publications board of a maximum of seven seniors to receive the Publications W.

Nominations for the girls most eligible for this recognition will be made by the faculty advisers of the four Winthrop publications—The Johnonian, The Journal, The Handbook, and The Johnonian. Final selections of the girls to receive the W's will be made by the Publications board consisting of Dr. James P. Kinsard, chairman; Dr. A. Parr, executive secretary; Dr. Paul M. Wheeler, and A. M. Graham.

Pins, in the form of a W with a star through the letter on which the word "Publications" is written, will be awarded at Senior chapel by Dr. Kinsard.

This is the first time that pins will be given, although a recognition was given last year.

Deserters on Island Choose Choice Reading Matter

The average Winthrop girl is such a creature—she would prefer, if she were on a desert island, these three books—the Bible, "Come With the Wind," and a collection of poetry.

The final compilation of a survey conducted by a business English class, the Bible was first with 274 votes and "Come With the Wind" a close second with 244. Various college novels and anthologies of poetry followed about 60 votes. In fourth place came the dictionary, probably having unbridled opinions with previous unbridled poems and maps, winning a total of 63 votes.

Twenty-one girls took the "Desert Island" seriously, choosing "Live Alone and Love It." One girl chose "How to Win Friends and Influence People," perhaps thinking of diplomatic relations with the savages; or, there are swags on a desert island? Still another chose "The Flamingo Clubhouse" which she styled grass skirt, no doubt. One girl chose the whole thing by saying "We Are Alone."

This $232.25 includes, in addition to room, board, tuition, and fees, the photograph of beauty spots in South Carolina taken by Carl T. Julian and Bayard Ruston, a two-page spread of individual hand pictures, and snap shots of small clubs taken in informal poses.

ASTRONOMY CLUB TO SEE ECLIPSE

Stokes Describes Event To Happen Tomorrow Morning

The Astronomy club will watch the total eclipse of the moon, the outstanding astronomical event of the month, from the Winthrop observatory early tomorrow morning.

The club will divide into two groups, the first to go to the observatory at 1:45 a. m. and remain until 3:30, the time of totality. The second group will observe until 9:30. Members of the club will make drawings of the stages of the eclipse.

Dr. Ruth Stokes, head of the mathematics department, gives the following account of the eclipse: "The beginning of the partial phase of the eclipse will occur when the moon enters the shadow of the earth at 1:37 a. m. Saturday, by 3:13 a. m. the earth's shadow will have completely covered the face of the moon, and the total phase of the eclipse will begin. The total eclipse will last until 4:05, that is for 21 minutes. Then the moon will begin to emerge from the shadow of the earth and will leave it completely by 4:31 a. m. In the eastern states the sun will rise before the moon has completely left the earth's shadow. "During the period of the total eclipse the moon will remain visible, but will take in a reddish color due to the fact that only the red, orange, and yellow rays of the beams of sunlight will penetrate the earth's atmosphere. This reddish light shines through the atmosphere that surrounds the dark disk of the earth, and forms a brilliant ring of several hundred miles in width."

Clemson Junior-Senior Ends Year's 'Trips-of-the-Week'

From early fall filled with football trips, fraternal pledge games, football games, to late spring of junior-senior banquets and college fests, there is a never-ending trip at Winthrop leads to almost every spot where there is fraternity to be found.

Last weekend Clemson and the Junior-Senior stood in the spotlight of Winthrop's date book, standing at the train station near Clemson late Sunday afternoon in a slow, drizzling rain after-it-all one wondered if the on-coming coaches would hold all the girls who had bags checked to Rock Hill.

Status Of Famous Men Watch Over Winthrop's Library

Eleven statues in the library—over one of every twenty persons steps to look at them; but only one out of every forty has ever bothered to find out about them. For the benefit of these few, placards have been placed to identify the illustrious characters of history and literature decorating the Carnegie library. Milton, the immortal poet with his drooping eyes; Sidney Lanier, the poet from Georgia, with his long nose; Plato, the philosopher of ancient Greece, pupil of Socrates; an Ovid, of Latin book fame, ranging along the walls. Goethe with his straight chin and forehead; the great name of German literature; and Voltaire, the French teacher and reformer who championed elementary education for the poor. Have been placed among the living standards of Winthrop's knowledge seekers. The busts of Dante, the poet genius; Homer, blind master of poetry, who is given credit for the two great epics—the Iliad and the Odyssey; and Milton, the celebrated French comic author and actor look down from the other niches in the wall. No wonder sculptors have seen fit to immortalize the features of these men in stone, and no wonder they have been chosen to watch over the constantly changing stream of Winthrop students who study, read, and dream below them.

Pretty, Youthful Mrs. John G. Kelly Is an Enthusiastic Homemaker

Mrs. J. G. Kelly, whose very name is a synonym for energy, is a slight, trim figure with short dark wavy hair and dark eyes alive with interest and enjoyment; she is often mistaken for one of her daughters and wasn't very much frightened when her home caught on fire recently. She quickly rescued two blankets and Mr. Kelly's watch but didn't leave for a month while repairs were being made. 'Not that I particularly minded leaving my housework, but it's such wonderful exercise.' She's very enthusiastic about Winthrop and Rock Hill, and describes herself as being 'like a child with a new toy.' I always like the new one best and Winthrop, best of all.' She was reared on a farm but is definitely not interested in living on one now. 'We tried it once but it just didn't work.' And they're planning to build a new home in Rock Hill, and it's darling. Saw the plans with my own eyes—
