Do Cuts Count?

A student is responsible for his own behavior in attending classes and deciding when he can afford to cut a class. He alone should decide whether his grade will suffer if he misses a class. If he feels he would rather cut and receive a lower grade, this is his prerogative. A student is intelligent (Cviously) since he is in college, and he is not only to develop a knowledge of books but also to learn to govern his life and actions through accepting the pressures of college life.

We ardently feel that all of this is true and hope that the faculty feels this, also. There was a strong indication of their sentiment on the issue of class cuts when the rule limiting cuts was changed to 1 allowing students the responsibility of unlimited cuts. Unfortunately some students have been faced by some professors with the burden of an archaic rule which was stricken with the Winthrop laws.

Complaints have been heard from professors and students that an attendance record would be kept to keep freshmen from missing class. We feel freshmen should be excluded from this rule altogether. Complaints have been heard that some professors state "if a student is on the border between, for example, a C and D, the professor will look at the number of cuts the student has. We fail to see how the number of cuts a student has affects the knowledge the student has exhibited on tests and papers.

If the class is one in which discussion enters into the final grade, a student is well aware of the consequences. He knows the rules he is taking.

We plead with professors who have misunderstood the rule to allow Winthrop students the responsibility promised in the rule in MORE TIME. We can understand a professor counseling a student and advising that attendance would help him become more familiar with his course and therefore aid him in taking the test well.

A Favorable Move

Last week through house council a poll was circulated asking students whether or not they approved of no curfew regulation for students. While not many students have been faced by this rule in the past, it is hopefully more of a new aspect that is being added to Winthrop life. The poll was among students to see how they felt about the curfew regulation because they have already been given the ability to make most decisions for themselves. We are glad to see some action being taken on this issue, and feel theWinthrop and regulation committee has been working at a good pace and diligently and we are hopeful some legislative action will be taken soon.

Long ago we approved of elimination of curfew regulations. We say--most curfews for us feel freshmen should be excluded from the general curfew rule, at least for Winthrop students. There are such as sheltered, innocent freshmen. That is a bit far out and not our reason for favoring imposed curfews on first year students. We simply feel that adjusting to a new academic as well as social life would be less pressuring with this limited curfew.

Plans are now, as we understand, to introduce this new regulation on our campus by granting this liberty first to seniors. We feel this is a wise move for it will give the committee studying the issue a chance to see it working first hand. They would have the chance to see the problems and advantages and then work on the wrinkles in the plan before introducing it for juniors and sophomores.

We hope the house to include the system works out well and that a curfew will not be given to this freedom also. We hate to see a GYP attached to this privilege but if that is absolutely mandatory, we plead with senators and administration not to make it impossibly high. If, it, many students would be unable to qualify, and this liberty will dwindle as the plan for an honor dorm did last year.

We applaud those introducing this new legal liberty, we watch it hopefully and favorably.

Columnist Praises Saga

BY GRACE GAMBELL

Three cheers for SAGA--we are pleased to see an improved student publication. It was much needed. The student publications have generally received the proper amount of criticism by professors and other students for being dull and uninteresting. There has been a great deal of material published which was of no value to the students. Now we have SAGA--a publication which is not only dull and uninteresting, but is also interesting and fun.

The best feature of SAGA is its ability to publish material which is of interest to the students. This is a great improvement over the past, when the only material published was the usual news items and announcements. SAGA has its own style and format, which makes it more interesting and fun to read.

SAGA is a publication which is not only dull and uninteresting, but is also interesting and fun. We are pleased to see that SAGA has been able to publish material which is of interest to the students, and we hope that this trend will continue.

As a result of this change, SAGA is now a publication which is not only dull and uninteresting, but is also interesting and fun. We are pleased to see that SAGA has been able to publish material which is of interest to the students, and we hope that this trend will continue.
Santa Visits Winthrop; Takes Course In Ho Ho Hoing

BY SALLY FOGERTY

Santa Claus made a pre-Christmas appearance at Winthrop University December 9th. He had pre-arranged to take over the campus December 19th, but had to be engaged in a special course in ho ho hoing. The course was conducted at the Winthrop University Safety Forces.

The next step on Santa's pre-Christmas list was to check out the traffic conditions that could be expected on Christmas Eve. Santa checked this out with Professor R. F. Williams, Chairman of the Winthrop Safety Forces.

One of the many points of instruction given to the Winthrop Safety Forces was the importance of getting children to their homes at a reasonable hour. The children were told to expect to see Santa at the door, and should be prepared to read the list of gifts that he was bringing down the chimney.

The final part of the course was to check the traffic conditions on Christmas Eve. Santa checked this out with Professor R. F. Williams, Chairman of the Winthrop Safety Forces.

One of the many points of instruction given to the Winthrop Safety Forces was the importance of getting children to their homes at a reasonable hour. The children were told to expect to see Santa at the door, and should be prepared to read the list of gifts that he was bringing down the chimney.

On Christmas Eve, Santa made his rounds to the families of Winthrop University. He was met with open arms and warm smiles. The children were overjoyed to see him and received their gifts with great enthusiasm.

The next day, Santa was scheduled to make his rounds again. However, due to the heavy traffic, he was forced to cancel his visit. The children were disappointed, but they were grateful for the experience and the memories they had made.

The Moral: Santa is a great teacher and a wonderful mentor. He teaches us the importance of the holiday season and the joy of giving. We should all strive to follow his example and spread the joy of the season to those around us.
Winthrop In Canada Participates
Enjoy Very Rewarding Summer

BY ARABIA POWER
If you're wondering what all that is going on in the far north, consider the Winthrop in Canada Program. For the last six years, Winthrop students have traveled to Canada to conduct research, to teach, and to participate in various activities. This year, the program was expanded to include more students and to cover a wider range of topics.

The program, which is sponsored by the Canadian government, is designed to provide Winthrop students with a unique opportunity to gain experience in a different culture. Students are selected based on their academic performance and their ability to work in a team. The program includes courses in Canadian history, culture, and geography, as well as opportunities to visit museums, historic sites, and natural wonders.

This year, the program included a trip to the province of British Columbia, where students had the opportunity to visit the city of Vancouver and to explore the surrounding areas. They also had the chance to meet with Canadian citizens and to learn about their way of life.

Aside from the academic component, the program also includes a variety of social activities. Students have the opportunity to participate in sports and cultural events, and to meet with other students from different countries. The program is funded by the Canadian government, and it is open to all Winthrop students who meet the eligibility requirements.

The Winthrop in Canada Program is an excellent opportunity for students who are interested in gaining experience in a different culture. It provides a unique opportunity to learn about a different way of life, and to gain valuable skills that will be useful in the future. If you are interested in participating in the program, you should contact the Office of International Programs for more information.
