A part of Winthrop

Four years at Winthrop are fast coming to an end for me. I am soon to complete the required hours and courses. On May 6, a Bachelor of Arts degree will be awarded to me and I, along with hundreds of other upperclassmen, have come to one party to celebrate the next. My grades were pretty good—although I was not particularly interested in what I was studying.

My sophomore year was much the same. I managed to get into the ROTC and to my surprise found studying a little easier. I could get more done in a shorter period. This left extra time to party—and I took advantage of that.

Winthrop, though, gave me something else during that year besides parties. I took a writing course in the Communications department and the professor there really made the subject worthwhile. Sure it was hard, but I enjoyed it. The criticism I received on my writing was given in such a way that I could learn and enjoy.

Winthrop gave me a direction in which to go—a major and a possible career choice. I began to change. Suddenly, I wasn’t thinking about parties all the time (although I did have my share of them or priorities) but was beginning to think about what I wanted to go and how I wanted to get there.

My junior year opened many doors for me. I joined the Drill Team, where I found not only a physical outlet, but also found some friends who turned me on to art.

Winthrop began to offer many outlets for my energy. Everywhere I went I found those willing to lend and to teach. Winthrop gave me a freedom to do and I seemed to enjoy what they were doing and that passion extended on to me. That same year I also started writing for the student newspaper.

For those of you who read THE JOHNSONIAN, you pretty well know how my sophomore year has been. Everyday I’ve learned something—about myself, my studies, or pretty well how my senior year has gone by.

For without Winthrop and the experiences I’ve had here, without the professors and people I’ve worked with, and without those very good friends I have made, I wouldn’t be me. The persons I have become would have been someone else if I had gone to any other school.

Upon graduation, Winthrop will have given all that it can to us. We will go on to greater problems and challenges and become more complex and enriched people. Remember though, there will always be a part of us that is Winthrop.

Please excuse the departure from the usual format. At this time of year I have always exercised my right to poetic license. All I ask for is a few words on the "willing suspension of disbelief."

The eye peered over the grinning slab, the ears quivered—listening—trained. The instantly louder roar to the west. The eye searched the love- looking clouds, but what was it? Lightning twice, and One-eye stood up. He scuttled out from the small channel, the others gathered around "the vault."

The crowd of malformed bodies huddled closely together, mutual distaste overcome by the need for temporary security. The stretch of unwashed bodies joined with the smell of rotting flesh caused One-eye to flinch. Although he knew his own running sores added to the odor. As one, the crowd avoided looking east, toward the four high projections of the horizon. The blood of the slow flow filled all with fear.

Loader and loader the noise grew, suddenly, three helicopters appeared through the clouds. Erupting from the bowels of each were a number of silvery cylinders, each suspended from a 'chute. They undoubtedly observed the plain of molten metal.

The blood was brighter on the blushed glasses. He straightened slowly, then hobbled over to the nearest metal whale. Noting the simple catch, he had used all Dutching. The fra-

The crowd squealed, grunted, and gasped in surprise. The beast, tortured, transformed, flesh vanished, disintegrated, and equanimous.

One-eye, however, stood fast as he recalled the fate pass- ed on by his father, who received it from his father. "They are there, and once every twenty years...do not fear them, they are like us..."

He looked at the rapidly- receding choppers and saw he wasn’t sure a hand warring from the side. He turned to look at the others, but they were nowhere to see, all having retreated in suppliant fear to their remaining slug mounds. He doubled over in pain, the long, wrenching cough worse than ever.

Dear Editor:

In answer to your recent article regarding security, we, as current Winthrop students, do not appreciate being stigmatized as "sissy" because we are not. We do not mind waiting and it is good we do not because we certainly have to. Security is necessary to carry on. We are not making wishes of the campus being empty in any daily way. Why can't they walk, too?

Also, in reference to the parking situation, how are 15 cars arriving at the same time in one parking lot supposed to be parked in only two places that are provided? We see nothing wrong with parking on the center line as long as no one is blocking the way. Where are we supposed to upload on Cherry Road or Oak land Avenue? We can't tote our luggage halfway across campus. As we see it, Security has some work to do to iron out its inconsistencies. When they get themselves straight and respect student mores, maybe the students will respond by having more respect for them.

Curtains up
By CYNTHIA WILSON

The class of 1980 presented its annual Junior Follies before a packed house on Saturday night, April 9 in Byrnes Auditorium.

This year's production entitled W.E.A.K., was written by Linda McGraw and Dotly Macek, both of Orangeburg and Delores Pendergraft from Great Falls.

The co-directors were McGraw and Susan Morris. According to McGraw, about fifty-five members participated in the annual production.

Donny Campbell, a sophomore from Rock Hill, summarized the audience reaction, "The follies was enjoyable. A great deal of hard work was put into the production."

According to Martha Ruth Ayres, president of the 1980 class, the production was a success. "We pulled together and pulled it off," said Ayres. "It was fantastic."

Take it easy

An outdoor concert by singers Russell and Johnston will take place at Winthrop's amphitheatre Saturday, April 21, 4:00-6:00 p.m., according to Ronnie LaFlite, chairman of Dinkins activities committee.

The amphitheatre is located between Sims and Kinard. Cokes will be provided for refreshment, LaFlite said.

Russell and Johnston sing easy-listening type of music.

Management services provided

The Small Business Development Plan for South Carolina, a state-wide plan for providing management consulting services to small businesses, has been approved by the Federal Small Business Administration.

Winthrop College, one of three institutions in the state with a Small Business Center, will provide management services to about a third of the state's small businesses.

Winthrop, the University of South Carolina, Clemson University, and South Carolina State College have formed a consortium to provide the state with small business consulting service.

News release

The Paperback Collection at Dacus Library is under review. A library committee is studying the collection to decide whether to discontinue the collection, keep it as it is, or make changes in its organization, circulation, and selection procedures.

"The collection was instituted to provide students, staff, and faculty with recreational reading from popular works that the library generally would not purchase for its permanent collection," notes Mrs. Ruth Ayers, chairman of the committee. "The committee will be surveying library users to see how well the collection fulfills its purpose and to solicit suggestions for its improvement."

If you use the Paperback Collection and want to have a say in its future, stop by the library circulation or reference desk and fill out a short questionnaire.

Annual competition for overseas study

The Institute of International Education has announced that the opening of the 1980-1981 competition for grants for graduate study or research abroad in academic fields and for professional training in the creative and performing arts is scheduled for May 1, 1979, according to Winthrop Honors Office.

It is expected that approximately 600 awards to 50 countries will be available for the 1980-81 academic year.

The purpose of these grants is to increase mutual understanding between the people of the United States and other countries through the exchange of persons, knowledge, and skills. They are provided under the terms of the Mutual Educational and Cultural Exchange Act of 1961 (Fulbright-Hayes Act) and by foreign governments, private corporations, and private donors.

Applicants must be U.S. citizens at the time of application, who will generally hold a bachelor's degree or its equivalent before the beginning date of the grant and, in most cases, have at least two years of professional experience after the bachelor's degree.

Creative and performing artists are not required to have a bachelor's degree, but they must have at least four years of professional study or equivalent experience.

Social work applicants must have at least two years of professional experience after the bachelor's degree; candidates in medicine must have an M.D. at the time of application.

Selection is based on the academic and/or professional record of the applicant, the validity and feasibility of the proposed study plan, the applicant's language preparation and personal qualifications. Preference is given to candidates who have not had prior opportunity for extended study or residence abroad.

Information and application material may be obtained from William W. Daniel, Jr., Fulbright Program Adviser at Winthrop who is located in the Honors Office, 202 Tillman with office hours from 8:30 to 5:00. The deadline for submission of applications to the Adviser is October 10, 1979.

"It's a good experience!"

BY JEFF CLARK

The Winthrop College Model United Nations begins its third annual conference this week, according to Jody Guy, student co-ordinator for the program.

Issues will be raised, resolutions will be debated, and decisions and propositions will be made. Uniquely structured, the Model U.N. 'is composed of delegations from Carolina high schools chaired by Winthrop College students,' Guy said.

According to the Model U.N. brochure, the major objectives of the conference are: 1) to involve the participants in a simulation experience designed to expand more awareness of concerns and issues facing the world community, 2) to expose the participants to diplomats involved with the United Nations, and 3) to facilitate interaction between high school students and the Winthrop College community.'

The 11-member Secretariat, sponsored by the Student Government, is strongly backed by the administration, the Political Science Department, and the students here at Winthrop. With this support, the model U.N. has become outstanding in its field of operation, Guy said. It has acquired a reputation of excellence and academic and professional quality during the past two conferences. This year's sessions prepare to be a continuation of a pattern of excellence, she said.

Over 225 high school students from some 49 Carolina high schools will be attending this year's conference representing 65 member-nations and delegates from all over the world. Each high school student is assigned a country and delegation in November, of the previous year, each delegation is chaired by a Winthrop student. Each delegation has a P.L.A. 200 and 201. This student will conduct the introductory debate for his delegate and chair opening night.

All delegations will, in Committee sessions, debate issues for the purpose of submitting resolutions to the General Assembly. These committees, composed of high school students and by Winthrop students are: 1) Political and Security Committee, 2) Social and Humanitarian Committee, and 3) Legal Committee.

The first committee is primarily concerned with world issues from a political perspective such as arms control, colonialism, and the Middle East situation. The second reviews social and economic issues of the world, for example, food, medical needs, economic aid, and environmental concerns. The third relates to world legal standards that is, issues of human rights, law of the sea, and terrorism. Changes can be made in issue topics between committees, since no committee is strictly limited to their issues.

The high school students must be semi-expert roleplayers, Guy said. They must, through research, become the representatives of their assigned country. They must often represent different countries, Guy said that this adds an atmosphere of professionalism when a high school student must perform on a level he may have not experienced previously. To add to the professional atmosphere and emphasize the expected attitude toward the conference, all delegates from high school and college level are required to follow a strict dress code: men-coat and tie, women-dress or pantsuit.

"The Winthrop Model U.N. has a high quality of debate. We try to make it as professional as possible," Guy said. "We have different personalities of different people from the United States, Canada, and different countries. All over South Carolina and part of North Carolina coming together and debating issues that are complicated and controversial, to say the least. And many of them are scared the first time, but after that, they're not-nor are they professionals." Winthrop will also require some true professionals, Guy said. Eight diplomats visiting from the U.N. in New York will be on hand to observe the conference proceedings. William David Angel, delegate to the conference. (Continued on page 6)

Office of the Secretary General, will offer the keynote-banquet speeches on the future of the U.N. in regards to youth programs such as the Model U.N. Other delegates include Mr. Gonzalo Palacios, Embassy of Venezuela; Mr. Ejoh Abuah, Permanent Mission of Nigeria; Mrs. Giuliane Allam, Arab Republic of Egypt; Mr. Nabil Elaraby, Egypt; Mr. Salam Haidar, India; Mr. Olov Temstrom, Sweden; and Mr. Conrad J. van Tooran, Kingdom of the Netherlands.

These delegates, in addition to observing the conference, will conduct a press conference for area television and radio stations as well as area newspapers in the Faculty/Staff room in McBryde Hall.

The Model U.N. represents a very high level of academic competition. "Many students are missing important social events like their Junior/Senior, which is the biggest social event on their campuses just to come and participate in the U.N.," said Guy. "And this dedication will be profitable for some. The Model U.N. presents awards of excellence for those who achieve individual excellence. Five awards will be given to Winthrop students for outstanding achievement and the Secretariat will give three delegation awards. The Secretariat award is for the delegation which provides a unique contribution to the overall success of the conference."

Other activities for the delegates enjoyment outside of the scheduled sessions are a dance at the Shack at 5 p.m. on Thursday, April 5, at the Rock Hill Mall.

Proposed issues for debate are: the Middle East situation, including the new treaty, the Yemen conflict (U.S.-Soviet involvement), nuclear weapons and the cessation of nuclear tests, mercenaries in Africa, the cease fire in Rhodesia, colonialism, the International Year of the Child (to include refugee children's human rights and infant nutrition), transnational corporations, food crises, environmental controls, international sports (particularly the banning of South Africa from the Olympic Games), Law of the Sea, and Laws governing outer space satellites.

Children's day at Rock Hill

Winthrop College students, along with local agencies and organizations which serve children, sponsored a day-long event for children Thursday, April 5, at the Rock Hill Mall.

The "Celebration of Childhood," activities included a math center, art center, music center, and listening center. Exhibits featuring class work by area children and information booths for parents were also set up.

A few of Rock Hill youngsters try their hands at puppets. The "Celebration of Childhood" was held in conjunction with the "International Year of the Child," which is being observed this year worldwide.
Optimistic outlook for women in job market

BY GWENDOLYN GLENN

Are you a qualified college graduate who is unemployed, discouraged, frustrated with one of the above, then this College's career counselor, has women are bringing in the job market. Ms. Dorsett said, "I feel things are improving especially with equal opportunities." She foresees no conceivable reason why a woman should not get a job if she is qualified for the position.

Ms. Dorsett said, "Women are not satisfied with traditional roles; they are willing to intensify their job search, and are seeking jobs of security, leadership, and management."

Ms. Dorsett said, "I see more working women than ever before. This accounts for 45% of jobs. However, she concedes women in clerical and teaching roles are nontraditional. "I see more women coming out of business schools getting jobs and discovering they can handle responsibilities they have been told traditionally are not their roles," she said.

Ms. Dorsett cites an increase in women in business areas such as accounting, management, computer science, and noted increases in politics and communications. "Women are making an effort to select jobs with viability," she said.

Ms. Dorsett said, "Women are competing with men, but many times they are not receiving the same salaries as men. There is approximately a $5,000-$7,000 difference in median income for females as opposed to males. A Carnegie study supports her with evidence such as women account for 2.3% of executives earning at least $25,000 a year, median weekly income of full-time working women was 75% of men's pay in professional jobs, according to Ms. Dorsett. "Traditionally women are receiving less, but as they become more successful in responsible positions, this aspect will improve," she said. She added that women who hold the MBA degree has a better chance of succeeding in the business world. These women are as marketable as men and can command and receive an equal salary. When searching the market for a suitable job, Ms. Dorsett said one must take into consideration the fact that 80% of women are found through "getting to know people that you are looking for employment." Friends are sources one can turn to for job tips, but information interviewers can also prove helpful. The interviewer could refer you to someone you are unaware of and give you a tip on a job opening," she said.

Ms. Dorsett said that an ineffective interview technique seeks often reside in is blindly sending out resumes to prospective employers. She feels this is a poor technique because the average return is very low. Statistics prove that on the average, only one job offer is made for every 1,470 resumes a company receives.

Ms. Dorsett said, ""Anyone seeking a job should be prepared for rejections and disappointment, and should not think they did not land a particular job because of their gender, and should keep trying." Ms. Dorsett said the first step one should take in preparing for an interview is to write a good resume with established career objectives. The next step is to take a look at yourself and tally your assets and abilities to find out in what areas you are qualified.

"Women should broaden their horizons in small areas where opportunities are fewer in number. Women should broaden their horizons in small areas where the opportunities are fewer in number. They should broaden and be willing to relocate if necessary," she said. Ms. Dorsett said that before the appointed day of an interview, the career woman should research a prospective place of employment and evaluate data to determine how she would fit in the organization and communicate this to the interviewer.

In the interview situation, Ms. Dorsett considers the woman who is prepared to sell herself to the interviewer as having an slight advantage others who do not have this insight. "If the company does not have an opening for a woman with your qualifications, try to make yourself available to the employer that they need you." Here again, getting home-work done by company is important, she said.

Ms. Dorsett said a woman should go into an interview with confidence and positive, but not overconfident, arrogance. She said women should be assertive. "Women should do not have this insight. They should be assertive, not opinionated. They should be shocked, and the business world can come to their aid," she said.

Ms. Dorsett said that before the appointment, the woman should be prepared for rejections and disappointments and should not be discouraged. "If the company does not have an opening for a woman with your qualifications, try to make yourself available to the employer that they need you." Here again, getting home-work done by company is important, she said.

"Women should take advantage of a skilled person in the company and learn from him/her. I'm a firm believer that everyone can learn from each other," and more women took this attitude, they would realize that this is one means by which women can succeed in their chosen careers.

Success in '79

BY MARIE A. GOODSON

The long hours of planning, hard work, and effort came together on Sunday, April 8, for the Parent's Day reception which was held on the first floor of Dinkins. Other events on the agenda for the day included luncheon held in Thomson cafe-teria, an archive exhibit; shown in Dinkins; the Coma-beeke Road Race, a performance of the Winthrop jazz and wind en-semble; and a slide show which was present-eded in Dinkins. In majority, the activities were organized by the Student Life Committee of the Student Government Association, under the able direction of chairman John Johnson. The Student Life Committee also worked with Epicure Food Ser-vices during the reception.

Ruby Richardson of Epicure felt that Parents' Day "79 was a huge success. Concerning the reception, she stated, "This was the largest and the smoothest."

If you weren't here, you really missed something. For those of you who were, "Aren't you glad you did?"

Next year’s Dinkins program board is off to a great start. According to Ronnie Laffitte, the new president, next year’s board will be one of the most enthusiastic and successful in years. The new members have already been meeting to make plans for next year.

Mary Pridgen, new chairwoman of publicity, commented that publicity will see a lot of changes next year. The biggest change will be that the information relayed to the students will be updated weekly. Pridgen also feels that publicity should be more creative in order to capture the attention of more of the students.

Films will also see a number of improvements next year. Tim Burke, the new chairman, has many ideas for the committee such as serving refreshments at movies, showing a movie more than once, and having theme nights so the students can participate in the atmosphere of the show. Burke also added that they may show some light comedy movies at Across The Street.

The Special Events Committee will be headed by John Gibson next year. His major goal is to plan events for the majority of the students. Gibson feels that they need to get away from the same old events such as the Fall Bash where people come for the purpose of getting drunk. The event may be more appealing to more of the students if the plans were made to include those who would rather do something besides drink.

Gibson also plans to stage more student events on campus such as picnics or games at Sims field. This would be more convenient to the students.

Ray Feaster told us that concerts and dances need to be arranged so that the students have something to look forward to. According to Ray Feaster, we have too many small, ineffectively organized concerts and dances. He plans to bring in some big name performers for the fall and spring concerts. He also wants to have a few major dances rather than so many small ones. Feaster added that the promotion of concerts and dances would also see a great deal of improvement over this year.

The new chairman of Tours, and Games, Edie Mayer, commented that what the committee will see more of next year is organization. She feels that this would get more people involved in the activities. Mayer also considered having a special event such as a wacky game day to get away from the ordinary type of games. She added that next year there will be better trophies to be given out immediately after the event.

This is only a small peek at what the program board will return with next year. Sally Grice, new vice-president, commented that she would like to see the board work in more unity next year with the students and other campus organizations such as the SGA. She wants all of the students to feel that the program board belongs to them and that they are welcome to take part in it.

Hop to It........

BY RICHARD A. POOMORE

The contestant sits on the starting block, his eyes blinking rapidly and his muscles tensing as he waits for the judge to go ahead. The coach is tense and a little worried, even though he is confident of his entry's ability. The judges are ready, and a roar rises from the crowd as the coach claps, jumps and shouts at the frog on the block.

Suddenly, strong muscles push the body away from the block and through the air for a distance that is three times longer than the contestant himself. Two more jumps follow in quick succession, resulting in an almost unbelievable total distance of 8 feet 9 inches.

Is this the "Let's Get Small Olympics?" No, it's the annual Come-See-Me weekend frog jumping contest held in Rock Hill.

The event took place on Saturday, April 7, at the Rock Hill City Hall fountain. Each entry was allowed three jumps, the total distance representing the length of the jump. However, if the frog made no move in 15 seconds, he was disqualified.

Such entries as "The Incredible Hulk," "Jeremiah," and "Medinal" made impressive leaps, but none could compare with "The 68,000,000 Frog" which made a jump of 10 feet 2 inches, taking first place. The frog, owned by Mrs. Williams of Springfield, S.C., was the only one to pass the 10 feet mark.

"Ruby," owned by Janice Griffin of Rock Hill, took second place with a 9 feet 3 inch leap. In third place was "Uncle Buckle" with a jump of 9 feet.

"Uncle Buckle" is just practicing for the Governor's jumping contest in Springfield," said Bobby Williams, owner of the frog and father of first place winner Ernest. A spectator commented that "them boys from Springfield sure know how to raise frogs."

People entering frogs in the contest ranged in age from about two years to nearly ninety. Nine last minute entries from the Meadow Haven Nursing Center, most of them using walkers or sitting in wheelchairs, forced the judges to leave the fountain and move to the surrounding sidewalk. Judges asked for volunteers to help put the frogs on the block. From these nine entries, Mr. Epp's frog made a jump of 6 feet 6 inches. The last of these entries marked the end of the contest.

AND THEY'RE OFF AND HOPPING! Over eight hundred people participated in thirteen mile run during Come-See-Me weekend in Rock Hill last week.

You've heard of the Six Million Dollar Man, well, meet the Six Million Dollar Frog. He was the winner of the Come-See-Me frog jumping contest.

I CAN'T BELIEVE I ATE THE WHOLE THING! Tim Raxter, Tim Burke and Jim Gibson were three of the representatives at the second annual Burger Eating Contest held on April 7 at Towncenter Mall.
