Third Lecturer On The Series Is Edward Weeks

Editor Will Speak On Literary Trends

Presenting the third lecture in his 1919-20 series, Edward Weeks, editor of The Atlantic Monthly, will speak Tuesday evening, October 21, in the fried. Mr. Weeks’ lectures are part of the symposium on the "History and Theory of the Atlantic Monthly," which is being held at the Rhode Island College of Design.

The Atlantic Monthly has published for over 150 years a reading material a year even with some changes either, the staff is ready to get the magazine out on time. When Mr. Weeks became editor, the circulation of the magazine was about 100,000.

As present Mr. Weeks is interested in discovering a new American gentleman. "Somebody is to be an American gentleman," he says, "and some of our boys are trying to be American gentlemen. Our boys are trying to be American gentlemen and the world may not know that they are American gentlemen." Mr. Weeks will deal with the theme of the world." The Atlantic Monthly is a typical American magazine, he said, and that the老板 who do not know that they are American gentlemen, will have to be American gentlemen and the world may not know that they are American gentlemen.

International Affairs Editor of Newsweek Gives Views On Russia, England, America

"The fact that Russia has produced a society that is so important is a good sign," said Joseph G. A. of International Affairs, "because it is a sign that the world is moving in the right direction." Mr. A. was in London on the night that Russia and England declared war, and that the revolutionary movement, which had brought the British to power, was in danger of being lost.

On Russia and England Mr. A. said that the British people were afraid of Russia, but that they did not believe that Russia was a threat. He said that the Russian people knew that they were living in freedom and that they would have to have a new government in order to be free. The British people have been afraid of Russia, but that they did not believe that Russia was a threat.

The Royal family is very high in Russia, but the British people are afraid of Russia. Mr. A. said that the attitude has been affected by the fact that the Russian people are afraid of Russia, but that they did not believe that Russia was a threat. TJ Reporter Defines “Autumn” From A Winthrop Girl’s Point Of View

By SARAH ELEKAR

To the poets, autumn means the cooling breeze on the face, to some people it means the end of their summer vacation. To others a movie going to foreign parts, and to others it means the coming of the seasons will soon be coming to an end. While all of these hold true for Winthrop, Winthrop has its own way of defining the coming of the fall season.

The leaves turn, and fall, and become a big part of the fall season. The leaves turn orange, yellow, and red, and then fall to the ground, marking the end of the fall season. The leaves are picked up and shoveled, and the fall season is in full swing.

Winthrop's fall season is also marked by the coming of the holidays, such as Thanksgiving and Halloween. These holidays bring with them their own unique traditions and activities, such as family gatherings, pumpkin carving, and trick or treating.

Winthrop students and faculty are also busy during the fall season, with a variety of events and activities taking place. The fall season is a time to reflect on the past, and to prepare for the future.

Winthrop is a beautiful place to be, especially during the fall season. The leaves change colors, and the air is crisp and fresh. It's a time to enjoy the outdoors, and to appreciate the beauty of nature.

Winthrop is a community that is full of life and activity, and the fall season is no exception. Whether you are a student, faculty member, or visitor to Winthrop, the fall season is a time to enjoy the beauty of the campus, and to participate in the many activities that take place.

Winthrop is a special place, and the fall season is a time to celebrate the beauty of the campus, and the people who make it a special place to be. So get out and enjoy the fall season at Winthrop, and all that it has to offer.
