ABIGAIL'S STORY
TIDES AT THE DOORSTEP

The Mackays, LaRoches, Jenkineses, and Chisolms of
Low Country South Carolina
1671-1897
TABLE OF CONTENTS

Acknowledgements ix
On Reading This Book xi
Prologue xiii

Book One  Charleston and the Sea Islands

Chapters
I Charleston and the Sea Islands 3
II The Early Mackay Letters 25
III The Chisolm Maidens 43
IV Saratoga Springs, New York 47
V The Maturing Brothers 51
VI Bells at Brick House 71
VII ‘On the Main’ 73
VIII Halcyon Years 101
IX John Brown’s Raid 135
X How Happily the Days 137

Book Two  Six Octobers

Chapters
XI November 1860 143
XII November 1861 145
XIII November 1862 157
XIV November 1863 177
XV November 1864 199
XVI November 1865 217

Book Three  From the Ashes

Chapters
XVII Phoenix Rising from the Ashes 241
XVIII Phoenix Dashed to Earth 243
XIX By the Bootstraps 251
XX The Unabated Storm 255
XXI Traveller Nonpareil 267
XXII The Twilight Gathers 289

Reprise

Epilogue 321

Appendices 327

1 Beaufort Volunteer Artillery 355
2 Tour Guide 367
3 Clark/Hanckel Descendants 369
4 First Three Mackay Generations Genealogy 373
5 The Descendants of Abigail and George Chisolm Mackay 379
   The Line of Edward Robert Mackay 383
   The Line of Sarah Jane Mackay 387
   The Line of Mary Martin Mackay 389
   The Line of Anne Chisolm Mackay 396
   The Line of William Archibald Mackay 410
   The Line of Isabella Fripp Mackay 413
   The Line of Joseph Jenkins Mackay 425
   The Line of Jessie Elvira Mackay 433
   The Line of Ella Elliott Mackay 437
   The Line of Robert William Mackay 440

6 Antecedents, Collaterals, and Descendants of Micah Jenkins (1795-1876) 442

Bibliography 453
Index 455

Antecedents, Collaterals, and Descendants of Micah Jenkins (1795-1876) 465

Index 471
IN THIS HOUSE was born ABIGAIL MARTHA JENKINS and here on January 15, 1829 she was married to George Chisolm Mackay, Esquire. This book covers more than one hundred years of the life and times of this remarkable Low Country family, centered on Abigail and George, who was also born on the island in the early years of the nineteenth century. The Mackays of Mackay’s Point, and the connected LaRoche, Jenkins, and Chisolm families, “represented all that was best of their times and the plantation culture of South Carolina.” Although their way of life perished in 1862 when they were driven from their home by a water-borne Federal force debarked on Mackay’s Point, this close-knit, gentle, and loving family survived the devastation of War and Reconstruction and preserved for future generations the aristocratic virtues of their culture.

The central documents which tell the story of the Mackay family include “The Tribute,” a memoir containing personal recollections of Abigail Jenkins Mackay recorded by her daughter-in-law Kate Devereux Mackay; the Reminiscences of Abigail’s son Joseph Jenkins Mackay, a document long thought to be hopelessly lost but recently recovered; a series of letters written from 1822 to 1893 by the Mackays and their Chisolm cousins; and the Diary of Episcopal cleric John Hamilton Cornish, who married into the Jenkins family. These first-person accounts of the life and times of the nineteenth-century Mackays are linked by a narrative structure and footnotes which identify, explain, and amplify the information contained in the letters and recollections. A genealogical appendix traces the descendants of the Mackays to the present day.

After an introduction and the series of letters and narratives featuring the generation of George and Abigail and the “halcyon days” of the ante-bellum South, the book turns to the War Between the States and the generation represented by George and Abigail’s sixteen children. Presented in the larger context of the war, the drama and tragedy of the five Mackay sons and the five sons-in-law, and numerous Jenkins and LaRoche nephews, are brought into sharp focus with the death of son Georgie at Spotsylvania’s Bloody Angle and that of nephew General Micah Jenkins six days earlier at the Battle of the Wilderness. The aftermath of war brought another grievous loss to the family when in 1867 the oldest son, Edward Robert Mackay, was murdered and robbed while crossing St. Helena’s Sound.

By this time George Chisolm Mackay, Sr., had died; Abigail had lost three children as infants, her oldest daughter had died in childbirth at age twenty-three, and two sons had been killed. She lived for more than thirty-five years as a widow, presiding over a family of children and grandchildren who had, among others, the surnames Drayton, Gantt, Hutson, Johnson, LaRoche, Salley, and Mackay. After Reconstruction Abigail became a “traveler nonpareil,” visiting her numerous progeny all over the South until her death in 1897. In the eyes of her descendants she remains, as daughter-in-law Kate Devereux Mackay described her, “one of the most beautiful characters I have ever known, whose long life is a record not only of remarkable ability and untiring usefulness in her day and generation, but also of most patient and cheerful acceptance of more and sharper vicissitudes than are often met in this changing life.” This collection of personal and historical facts, observations, and anecdotes tells her story in a way that is informative, entertaining, moving, and always interesting.