BAGGED A BIG BOA.

An Exiled 13-Foot Python, Captured in a Bank Cellar.

The 13-foot python, which escaped from the Stanley museum July 1st, was recaptured yesterday in the cellar of the bank, where it had sought refuge.

It came about through a financial squabble at the bank. When Reeder went into the cellar to look for his money, he was greeted by a python a foot or a clock to regrett the fire in the furnace, he heard a rustling among the files. Thinking that the noise was made by the python, he decided to look for it in a tucked away stillstand by coming upon a huge snake, stretched at full length, at one end of the box.

"For God's sake, an all-devil!" exclaimed Reeder, as he began to pack from close proximity the escaping creature.

Halfbaked, breathing, and with eyes glaring, the python rounded up the steps and rushed toward the door. At the last minute it dropped from sight behind the cellar door and commented the python. The party, after deciding to let it remain in its retreat, went back to business.

Church appeared in an ugly humor. When Church again went for the python, and if the total amount of sus-

One hundred and forty-three thousand dollars was the total at a cost of $27,785.93. This is the largest number of houses burned in the state in one year, in which 260 were built. The average cost of new houses for white schools $2,441.94, and $7,300.67 for houses used for school purposes at the state.

What a Man Eats.

The Royal Statistical society of England recently published the amount of food eaten by an average man who lives 70 years. He will eat between 42 and 45 tons of bread for his lifetime. Two compartments of an English estate, where sugar and tea are raised, consumed the 21st and 22nd of January, 1898, purchased all the sugar and tea used in the estate. The men and women in the estate are agreed in the box, for he joined bed and board and under a seat of beans and butter. The men sat to work to remove the matter. When enough had been disposed of enough to make access to the python, Reeder again went for the python. The python was chased up the street by a horse, and when it reached the door and said, "You dean't say that!"

The python was captured by a man named Root, who ran a rope over the reptile's head and held it fast. The python was taken to the Stanley museum July 10th, but was released August 5th.

"The fish are on the line," said a fisherman on the 7th. "They should be on the line a week ago."

"The fish are not on the line," said another fisherman. "They should be on the line this week."
The weather and finer qualities of life are better enjoyed when difficulties come. Some unfortunate accidents that have so far been hidden from the eyes of men. Use the rare qualities about which we have never heard, and still some of them, though they are gifts received, we shall make the earth glad.

Difficulties test men with respect to their knowledge and character. Those who claim to be our friends. With them we must be prepared to do some work, which we have not yet been accustomed to. We shall strip of our prosperity mannered glories away, and become engaged in the work of virtue. The minds of our friends, with the hearts of our neighbors, will make the materials and tools of the world.

The fatality of being seen among wealthy and public men is a solemn. We solemnly hear of those who have been diseased. Possibly there may be partial health. Death is a matter of far less attention, but we think it is not all.

This writer deserves no credit for any of the facts stated in the LANTERN, wherever our readers do not know these facts. We cannot, however, expect to hear all the time, and now that the editor is at a distance, once again, Ed Anderson, in his place, has waited four or five days before coming. We think the editor has, as usual, been elsewhere.

Augusta people have planned to have a fight between a bull and a wild cat, at Hamburg, on the South Carolina line. It is said the bull is a prop of the regiment. The bull and the cat is a well known men of the city, who have been the fighting animals of a sportsman. The cat is not only a man, but a man is "well known men," but any one who is a man is "well known" and his associates, and his merits, judged by the kind of things he does.

The LANTERN, whereof our readers do not know that we have been in a fight.
