CHAPTER XXIII.

In the Desert.

Dr. Hassan stepped forward and with a measured step began to cross the expanse of dry land. The sun was high in the sky, and the heat was oppressive. Hassan's movements were rapid and determined. He had come to meet the Arab who had volunteered to take them to the nearest water source. The Arab was not far behind. Hassan could see him now, on the horizon, his figure a mere speck against the sand.

The Arab was a tall, sturdy man, dressed in simple garments suitable for the hot climate. He carried a pistol in his belt and a long knife at his side. Hassan paused, looking upon the winged ghouls of the desert. The sky above were two little black specks, racing across the pale blue expanse of sand.

"They say they are coming back," Hassan said in Arabic. "Our water.

The Arab nodded, his eyes narrowing as he listened to Hassan's words. "Yes," he said, "I have heard of them. They are dangerous."

Hassan nodded, his face grave. "They will attack us if we are not careful," he said. "We must be prepared to defend ourselves."

The Arab nodded again, his eyes reflecting the harsh realities of the desert. "I will inform my men," he said. "We will be ready."

Hassan stepped forward, his eyes fixed upon the horizon. He knew that they were close to the water, but he also knew that the journey would be long and dangerous. He had a feeling that the desert held many more secrets, and he was determined to uncover them all.

He turned to the Arab, his face expressionless. "We must be ready," he said. "There are dangers in the desert that we cannot ignore."

The Arab nodded, his eyes reflecting the intensity of Hassan's gaze. "I will be ready," he said. "I will protect you."

Hassan smiled, his face showing a rare hint of relief. "Thank you," he said. "I am grateful for your assistance."

The Arab nodded, his eyes fixed upon the horizon. "I will be ready," he said. "We will be ready."

Followed Friend's Advice

After trying Frohne's and Trone, Mrs. L. C. Carl, 406 Main St., Dallas, Texas, writes to the Pitney laboratories as follows:

"I have been a sufferer from gout, and Frohne and Trone were, recommended, and I am glad we took advantage of your book, wonderfully effective. Thank you, thank you; the rheumatism is unnoticeable since using your remedies. I am a believer in Cortright Metal Shingles. I wish you would send more copies of your book to people in your locality that has an acquaintance with gout.

Political Prayer Meetings

It is a sad day for Christendom when a public building is converted into a prayer meeting room. I am sorry to learn that a church has been converted into a political prayer meeting. I wish all political prayer meetings were forbidden by law.
