Life History of Women with Fibromyalgia: Beyond the Illness

Fibromyalgia is a chronic pain syndrome, which mostly affects middle age women and whose etiological factors remain unclear. Psychosocial aspects may have a relevant role as predisposing, triggering, and perpetuating factors for this syndrome, raising the interest about life history of patients with fibromyalgia. In this study, we interviewed 10 women with a diagnosis of fibromyalgia, who had identified a critical or very stressful life event before the onset of the syndrome. The interview about the life history comprised the whole life, before and after the onset of the syndrome, and the narratives were analyzed with interpretative phenomenological analysis. Nine themes emerged: struggle, focus on adversity, positive outlook, risks of unhappy childhood, help others, perfectionism and desire to achieve, dissatisfaction present, perception of injustice, and keeping feelings inside. A difficult life history is prevalent in these women and the themes identified are discussed in their relation with other qualitative studies and their possible role as predisposing and perpetuating factors for fibromyalgia. The ability to value the positive side of things, despite the adversities these women experienced, is highlighted as an aspect to explore in psychological intervention, to enable a better management of the syndrome.

Life History of Women with Fibromyalgia: Beyond the Illness

Abstract
Fibromyalgia is a chronic pain syndrome, which mostly affects middle age women and whose etiological factors remain unclear. Psychosocial aspects may have a relevant role as predisposing, triggering, and/or perpetuating factors for this syndrome, raising the interest about life history of patients with fibromyalgia. In this study, we interviewed 10 women with a diagnosis of fibromyalgia, who had identified a critical or very stressful life event before the onset of the syndrome. The interview about the life history comprises the whole life, before and after the onset of the syndrome, and the narratives were analyzed with interpretative phenomenological analysis. Nine themes emerged: struggle, focus on adversities, positive overlaps the negative, scars of unhappy childhood, help others, perfectionism and desire to achieve, unsatisfactory present, perception of injustice, and keep feelings inside. A difficult life history is prevalent in these women and the themes identified are discussed in their relation with other qualitative studies and their possible role as predisposing and perpetuating factors for fibromyalgia. The ability to value the positive side of things, despite the adversities these women emphasized, is highlighted as an aspect to explore in psychological intervention, to enable a better management of this syndrome.

Side Note Tip:

Quick Publish Queue

A quick publish queue is a feature in some software applications that allows users to designate certain documents or items for immediate publication or sharing, bypassing the usual review and approval processes. This can be useful in scenarios where time is of the essence or when there is a need to expedite the publication of content. It's typically used in contexts where the content is highly valued and the delay in publication could have significant repercussions. Users can add items to the queue manually or through automated processes, and once added, these items are prioritized for publication, often with notifications for stakeholders.

The Qualitative Report Conference

Every year since 2010, we have invited qualitative research practitioners, faculty, and students from around the world to join us on the NSU campus in January for The Qualitative Report (TQR) Annual Conference. The event is organized around a theme and features plenary addresses by internationally recognized qualitative research experts, peer-reviewed paper and panel presentations, and interactive workshops.

Transforming Qualitative Research

Insights from qualitative research are having a transformative effect on how we understand and manage our world. Quantitative renderings of what happened are now regularly joined by qualitative descriptions, interpretations, and explanations of not only the what, but also the how, the why, the who, the when, and the where to produce better context-sensitive information on which important decisions can be made. This emerging practice of research including qualitative and quantitative perspectives in inquiries has led to changes in how we design, evaluate, access, understand, and change the world around us.

Qualitative research can also have a transformative impact on our lives as it enriches our understanding of human and social processes. It can help us to recognize and appreciate the complexity of our social worlds and the diversity of our experiences.

In the 1980s, Dr. Stephen Goldstein, Vice President of Community Relations, organized and began the Forum Series, a long-running tradition at Nova Southeastern University. The Forum Series consisted of a luncheon or dinner along with a distinguished speaker who came to discuss their life and work with members of the Nova Southeastern University community as well as Broward County residents.

Many of the Forum speakers were immortalized in paintings by various artists. These illustrations, occasionally signed by the speaker, are presented here for viewing.

The collection will continue to grow as staff of the NSU Archives unearth additional artwork, digitize and upload them to this series. Staff are also working to build out the accompanying information with each image. If you have any additional information to add, please feel free to contact the NSU Archives at 954-262-4042 or nsuworks@nova.edu

The first class of doctoral students came from Florida, but also, Virginia, New Jersey, New York, Indiana, California, Minnesota, Venezuela, and India.

To read more about each student, their backgrounds and planned course of studies at Nova Southeastern University, please see the News Release on the "First Class of Students".

In the 1960s, James M. Hartley, II, functioning as the university architect for Nova Southeastern University, did many architectural renderings and illustrations for the Board of Trustees. These include a master plan fully developing the university in its final stage, along with individual buildings and their composite interior and exterior designs. The three original buildings at Nova Southeastern University were the Mailman/Hollywood Building, Parker Building, and Rosenfeld Building. While several of Hartley’s designs were never built (notably the Oceanographic Center), they are included in this collection to display the range of work and the original vision of the university’s founders.

While many of Hartley’s original designs have not survived, the NSU Archives are pleased to be able to present this collection of his architectural illustrations created for the fledgling university. Sincere thanks goes to the family of James M. Hartley, II, for allowing the NSU Archives to make those renderings available online and share them with a wider audience.

Dear Gold Circle Members:

A new year will be beginning soon—not just a school year but also a year for growth in Gold Circle for Nova University.

We will pursue the Living Endowment Scholarship Fund that is so necessary to enable students to fund their education. We are sincerely in need of your support and help with the project.

Our first meeting for the year will be at Ina Reed’s beautiful home on September 30th. Invitations will be in the mail soon.

We plan to continue the Nova University Distinguished Faculty Seminar series and you will be receiving more information on this.

I look forward to seeing you on September 30th.

Sincerely,

Margaret S. Sudbrink

Alvin Sherman Library
NSUWorks passes 100,000 downloads around the world!

In February of 2014, the Alvin Sherman Library, Research, and Information Technology Center at NSU launched an institutional repository to collect, archive and disseminate scholarship and historical materials produced by the faculty, students, staff, and alumni of NSU. In one year NSUWorks (http://nsuworks.nova.edu), has added over 6,000 items and has recently reached a second important milestone – over 100,000 downloads from around the world on March 18, 2015.

The repository is an online, open access archive that currently includes faculty publications, theses/dissertations, collections from the NSU Archives, five journals, three conferences, and a myriad of other items related to the history and scope of NSU’s past and present. NSUWorks continues to grow daily and welcomes submissions, questions and the opportunity to collaborate on projects at nsuworks@nova.edu.

The 100,000th download was an article in one of the journals housed in NSUWorks. The Qualitative Report, by a former EIS student and current employee of the Abraham S. Fischer School of Education, Daniel W. Turner in “Qualitative Interview Design: A Practical Guide for novice investigators” at http://nsuworks.nova.edu/etd/vol15/iss3/18/.
Conclusions

- Cheap student labor
- Identify “low hanging fruit”
- Identify opportunities
- Outreach / Form relationships
- Always say “Yes!” (or at least “Let me look into that!”)
