A.D. Squier wrote, "Last year. J. W. Reed has presented us with a magnificent annual address, made at public, the South Carolina annual meeting of the state legislature, and it is well worth the time of any conscientious and patriotic citizen." The governor then states that the legislature has been called to order, and he is ready to address the assembly. He then goes on to discuss some of the issues facing the state, such as education and the economy, and he encourages the state to work together to find solutions.

From the perspective of the legislature, cleanup is needed, and the governor is ready to address the assembly. He encourages the state to work together to find solutions to some of the issues facing the state, such as education and the economy, and he encourages the state to work together to find solutions.

At the conclusion of the governor's address, he raises a matter of great concern in the state, and he encourages the state to work together to find solutions to some of the issues facing the state, such as education and the economy, and he encourages the state to work together to find solutions.

The governor then turns his attention to the state's budget, and he encourages the state to work together to find solutions to some of the issues facing the state, such as education and the economy, and he encourages the state to work together to find solutions.
