A FORTUNATE BLUNDER. A Letter that Gently Influenced a Church Conference.

An accident sometimes turns out to be a blessing in disguise. Such an experience is related by Rev. P. S. White of Indiana. A stenographer was engaged for a church conference, but the stenographer handed it to the pastor. The clerk, reading it, happened to notice the rough handwriting and marked, as if by the momentary excitement, the places where he thought the name of a person had not been written correctly. As the stenographer had been asked to furnish the paper containing the entire speech, he was greatly surprised to learn that the pastor had not copied it correctly.

From this, it appeared that the stenographer had made a blunder in writing down the words, and that the pastor had failed to notice it. The conference, therefore, was to be held under the impression that the name of a person had been misspelled, and that the stenographer had made a mistake in copying the speech.

The stenographer, realizing the gravity of the situation, immediately went to the pastor and suggested that he should make a copy of the speech, in order to avoid any misunderstanding. The pastor, after some reflection, agreed to the suggestion, and the conference was held under the impression that the speech had been correctly written.

It is not every day that a blunder can be turned to advantage, but in this case, the stenographer’s blunder helped to bring about a more accurate and accurate speech, and the conference was held under the impression that the speech had been correctly written.
The Struggle Against Concealed Weapons

The Governor, in his message, dealt largely with the liquor question. He went on to say that the proposed law had equal terms for white and black and in a general way is a step in the right direction.

The State, however, was not one to forget the liquor questions, and the proposed law was not the only one to agree. The liquor questions should be more clearly defined, temporary in the "cal-de-sac." If referring to the statement that Hanna referred to the crime among the negroes, which, while very desirable, would be difficult to contend with than any other, and do not have their attention called to them even then it is only occasionally.

The Governor referred to the statement that a colored person had no expectations of office under the State government, and as the suppression of concealed weapons in South Carolina, and such a law would have no terrors for white and black is a problem that concerns one-fifteenth of "the negro population.

The Governor concluded that the candidates and you will cure the habit of carrying concealed weapons, and that the oath of similarity would be best to go no farther than this. Letter from Lockhart.

Laurel was climbing a hill at night. She was on her way to a new home. The night was dark and she was lonely. She had no one to help her, no one to guide her. She had to do everything herself. She was a strong woman, but even the strongest can feel lonely at times. She had been through many hardships, but this was the worst. She had to make a new start, and she didn’t know where to begin.

It was then that she saw a light in the distance. She followed the light, and soon she came to a house. It was a small house, but it was her home. She went inside and found a bed to sleep in. She was tired and hungry, and she slept soundly that night.

The next morning she woke up early. She went outside and looked around. She was in a new place, with new people. She was alive and well, and she knew she could make a new start. She was going to be happy.

Chapter viii

The end.

The woman saw a light in the distance and followed it. She found a house to sleep in and was able to start anew.
