A short distance from Edinburgh we built it. It is built on the site of the old church and is now occupied by the city of Edinburgh. It was designed by the architect Robert Adam and is considered one of the finest examples of its kind in Scotland.

A short distance from Edinburgh we built the Old Home of Ebenezer Erskine and Andrew Carnegie. It was erected in 1754 by Ebenezer Erskine and Andrew Carnegie, two prominent Presbyterian ministers of the time. The building was used as a church and school and is now a museum.

The building is a fine example of Scottish neoclassical architecture, featuring a large central gable and fluted columns.

The interior contains exhibits related to the history of the church and its founders, including artifacts, photographs, and documents.
