DO WE GROW WORSE

A word on the subject of the nearer than the world is a series of lucid, concise essays that have been widely read and discussed. In one essay, the author expresses concern about the state of the country and its people. The following passage is from one of these essays:

"Sorrow engendered by a few, like the telegraph and the ten-wheelers. Many have no use for the telegraph and the ten-wheelers. Therefore they give the morality of the day and pass them by without notice. They do not care to be educated on the subject of crime, hardened by the condition of menial distress it must be to those who are running the state as far as they can."

The author argues that the telegraph and the ten-wheelers have contributed to a culture of indifference and neglect when it comes to the issue of crime and its consequences. He suggests that there is a need for education and awareness to prevent the hardening of the public to the reality of crime and its impact on society.

The passage continues with a discussion of the need for moral education and the role of the media in shaping public opinion. The author argues that the media should not only report on crime but also educate the public on the causes and consequences of crime, and the importance of upholding moral values in society.

The author concludes by emphasizing the importance of education and awareness in preventing the hardening of the public to the reality of crime and its impact on society. He suggests that the media should play a role in shaping public opinion and in educating the public on the causes and consequences of crime, and the importance of upholding moral values in society.

The essay is a call to action for those who care about the state of the country and its people, and it provides a thoughtful analysis of the role of the media in shaping public opinion and in promoting moral education.
