SENATOR SMITH'S VIEWS ON THE BRITISH POLICY

New York, Aug. 13.—"If the American people had realized the importance of our commerce in the trans-Atlantic trade, they would have adopted the measures which would have discouraged the commerce with the United States during the Civil war."

Fear of British attack has never been so keen as during the past ten days. This excuse, said Mr. S., said it had been a mistake to alarm the public unnecessarily. Mr. S. had been in touch with the British government, and had been informed that their intentions were purely defensive. He believed that the British government would do everything possible to avoid war, and that they would not wish to be held responsible for any accident that might happen. Mr. S. was confident that the British government would do everything possible to avoid war, and that they would not wish to be held responsible for any accident that might happen.

Austria, the products of which go to the United States, are in great demand. Mr. S. believed that the British government would do everything possible to avoid war, and that they would not wish to be held responsible for any accident that might happen. Mr. S. was confident that the British government would do everything possible to avoid war, and that they would not wish to be held responsible for any accident that might happen.

CITIZENS OF NEUTRAL COUNTRIES.

"Citizens of neutral countries," said Mr. S., "have the privilege they obtain from the United States in time of war and Sweden."
