WAR CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of The Index.—I am sure you will be pleased to know that the title of the man in whose shoes you walk is no longer in your favor. But before you take the place of one who has always been known to the world as a most estimable gentleman, I have a letter to him that I could not help but read the other day, which I think is worth your perusal.

"Dear Sir, I am sorry that you should have been so unjust to me. I have always been your friend, and I am sure you would not have done me so much wrong if you had known the truth.

"I have always been a good man, and I have always done my best to serve you. I have always been a friend to you, and I have always been a helper to you. I have always been a good man, and I have always done my best to serve you."

This letter was written by a man who had been in the army for many years, and who had served his country faithfully. He had always been a good man, and he had always done his best to serve his country. He had always been a friend to his fellow soldiers, and he had always been a helper to them. He had always been a good man, and he had always done his best to serve his country.

I think you will be pleased to know that this man is in my favor, and that I will do my best to serve him. I will always be a friend to him, and I will always be a helper to him. I will always be a good man, and I will always do my best to serve him.

Mr. Williams was the acting secretary of the organization. The room was densely crowded with applicants for the graces, and our public men were in attendance to hear the address of the unfortunate man, when, from the door of the room, on the second floor of the building, a shot was fired. The Home of Isaac Newton.

Isaac Newton's father was a farmer, and died some months before Isaac's birth. After the death of his husband, Mrs. Newton married the Reverend Mr. Oldfield, with his grand-daughter. When Newton was of school age, he attended the Church school, but all of his spare time was devoted to the making of water-wheels, wind-mills, and other mechanical contrivances. When Isaac was twelve years old, his father died, and the boy, way, called to help take care of the farm. In his youth he showed very little interest in anything, he would rather go off to the lessees and read books, or peruse some book in mathematics. His uncle, the Rev. W. Oldfield, found him in the library, reading Euclid and the laws of Kepler, and decided to send him to Trinity College. Here Newton studied the laws of mathematics. In 1664 he took his degree of Bachelor of Arts.

While he was at college a plague broke out in London, and Newton went home to Cambridge, where he continued his studies. He became a fellow of Trinity, and in 1669 he was elected a fellow of the Royal Society. His first letter was written to the Rev. Mr. Oldfield, one of the members of the society, in which he described his discovery of the laws of gravitation. Return- ing to college, Newton, after obtaining his first place in the matriculation, became a member of the Royal Society and was elected in 1670. When the plague was over, Newton returned to Cambridge, and in 1687 he published his 'Principia Mathematica.'

The McKeen Wave.

The McKeen wave of prosperity has washed over the Atlantic coast from Maine to Florida. In New England it washed down the wages of cotton mill operatives 10 per cent., coming down to the cotton fields of the South, we find the price of cotton submerged in a wave of prices which rose from 5 cents per pound, and the little ripples of the wave have reached the Piedmont and North Carolina, where cotton has dried down to 37 1/2 cents per pound. In the mills of New England, the average salary is now $40 to $50 a good wage. When, on the Mississippi, it is difficult to sell a lot that for $50, there was a great outcry against the administration. But now in the face of the most extravagant promises made in a political campaign, it is found that the tide of prices is rising. The wave of prosperity has washed over the Atlantic states and the West, and the mills are full of workmen.

Joseph Wylie & Co.

The most important event of the past week has been the visit of the State Senator from Alabama to New York. He was in the city for the purpose of seeing the great industrial exhibition, and was greatly struck with the progress that has been made in this country. He was especially impressed with the fact that the factories are now operating at full capacity, and that the workers are better paid.
