IN the rocky desert of southern New Mexico, the writer had a holiday off from his work as a railroad surveyor and decided to make a trip to the eastern part of the state. He had been promised a splendid Christmas tree by a friend in Denver, and he determined to go there and see it for himself. He started out early on a clear, cold day, his horse loaded with supplies.

The trip was long and arduous. The road was winding and rough, and the traveler had to push his horse with all his strength to make progress. He was tired and hungry, and the cold wind cut through his clothes, making him shiver.

At last he arrived at the city of Denver, and was greeted by his friend. The Christmas tree was magnificent, and the traveler was filled with delight. He soon became engaged in social activities, and did not see much of the country.

During his stay in Denver, the traveler read a great deal, and became acquainted with many interesting people. He visited the museums and art galleries, and spent many pleasant evenings in the cafes and restaurants.

When the time came for him to leave, he was reluctant to leave his new friends. He promised to return soon, and to bring them some souvenirs from his travels.

The trip back was even more difficult than the trip there. The traveler was tired and in want of sleep, and the road was rough and dangerous. He was grateful to finally arrive back at his home, and was glad to be reunited with his family. The traveler returned home with many stories to tell, and many memories of his holiday in Denver.
A War Chest.
Germany and Russia, it seems, have their eyes on China. The indications are that the former will endeavor to divide the territorial interests of the latter.

What other powers about China? Raise our opinion upon the subjects of the future and as far as England will not submit to these demands.

This government is ordering a naval expedition, which, as it would not be surprising if England desteems any attempt of the latter powers over their part of China.
