WASHINGTON LETTER.

The Big Bill Dies in Congress.

The New York City News states that the Big Bill has finally died in Congress.

The Big Bill had become an important issue in Congress, and the news of its death was met with relief by many of its supporters.

The Big Bill was a proposal to establish a national system of railroads, and its supporters hoped that it would provide a major boost to the economy.

The bill had faced opposition from many quarters, and its supporters had worked tirelessly to secure its passage.

The news of its death came as a shock to many of its supporters, who had hoped that it would be a major victory for them.

However, the news was also met with relief by many of its opponents, who had long been critical of the bill and had worked to prevent its passage.

The bill's death came after months of debate and negotiation, and it was a significant moment in the history of railroads.

The news of its death was met with mixed feelings, but it was clear that the future of railroads would be marked by new challenges and opportunities.

End of the Big Bill.
We have very little hope that the Democratic party can nominate a man who can attract the moderates of the party. The people are not enthusiastic about Hearst, the chief candidate among them, and the "Railroad Tycoons" are not in a position to produce anything in particular, except for the "railroad" and "full" titles of their candidates.

The local and state political leaders are unable to get together in a strong, united front. This is partly because the various elements in the state are too independent and dissimilar to unite for any definite issues, and partly because the party spirit is not strong enough to overcome the natural tendency toward personal ambition and division.

The /Republican/ newspaper lauds the virtues of these "railroad" types, except Hearst, who stands for a more aggressive and populist platform.

But the beauty of the blooms of the cherry tree literally covering almost every inch of its surface is evident that this man had no regard for the beauty of the limbs and trunks without a covering of blossoms. It is sadly needed. The parents who yearn for the spiritual, moral, and religious growth of their children, for the "best families" turn out, will be more definite—and, if only they were truthful. It was observed that the "best families" turn out.

JEWEL

A Broad Statement As True As It Is Broad

The Jewel Ranges Are the Best Ranges on the Market.

They are very heavy and are substantially and mechanically built, and are fixed with thick ashless cooking, which makes a very durable and lasting Range as well as a tight oven that retains an even heat which makes cooking quick and easy.

The JEWEL RANGE also has all of the latest improvements, the stove and chorus attachment, new dough-pan, as well as the charming ash-pan, heavy box linings, and strong warming closet that keeps food warm and moist. The Jewel in its best test.

Procrastination

Change is not in the capacity of things—It never used to be. If you continue to procrastinate, things will be the same as they are. It is not wise to waste time. You may wish to set a goal but fail to achieve it. Time will pass and you will regret it.

Smiling is the Only Opinion

The only thing you can opinion for is your smile. If you wish to make someone happy, give them a smile. It is the easiest way to show kindness.
