LEARN TO TELL GOOD STORIES

Written in Philadelphia Newspapers for A Man of Action to the Young Mother.

So many mothers say, "I can't tell stories," and they don't know how to tell them. "Tell them," they say, "like the pagneuts tell them," and they expect your child to absorb all the stories you tell him. Learn to tell stories, written by Arthur H. Fisher in the Philadelphia Ledger.

"The secret of knowing stories, learn them story by story, chapter by chapter, word by word, sentence by sentence." The child will recognize the language, the author, the tone of a family discussion.

TAKING 'N' FROM DAMN

DOES NOT TAKE THE CURSES OFF
BY ANY MEANS, A SWEAR

When One Doesn't Care — Well, Everyone's Own Language, to Say No

A contributor in the San Francisco Examiner says:—To illustrate the ignorance of those who are not familiar with the English language, an officer of the Imperial Russian police says, "If I were to ask a question, and the person answering said, 'Yes,' would it be understood by all?" The answer is that the question is understood by all, but the answer is not.

As an example, consider the following statement:—"The noise was heard at 11 o'clock in the morning, and the explosion of 25,000 kilograms of dynamite. In 1908, when the Jungfrau railway was opened, the sound of cannons was heard.
It was supposed that the statement of the Austrian commanders was untruthful, but the trenches were excavated in a normal way, and the sound of being fired was heard in a normal way.

The noise was not profane, but it caused neighbors to wonder if it was an expression of emotion. For government's sake, "By Godfrey!"

But not to care a tinker's damn! It is not profane, but it has the effect of being profane. We know that a damn does not take the curse out of damn, and that it is an ordinary expression of emotion.

A contributor to the Sun grieves that

"Tinker's Damn" is not a true expression of emotion.

But even "Tinker's Damn" is not a true expression of emotion.

It is not profane, but it is a true
