Frazier's Stables
Philadelphia, April 16.—The Superior Court of the United States in the district of Delaware held its first session today with the decision of matters of national importance. The court, which is composed of three judges, is sitting in the United States Courthouse.

The court heard the case of the United States v. J. P. Morgan. The government sought to enjoin the defendant from proceeding with the construction of a railroad, which it alleged to be in violation of the Anti-Trust Act.

The prosecution argued that the defendant, a wealthy and influential financier, had engaged in practices that were harmful to the public interest. The defense, on the other hand, contended that the defendant was acting in accordance with the principles of free enterprise and that the railroad was necessary for the economic development of the region.

After a lengthy hearing, the court ruled in favor of the government, ordering the defendant to cease and desist from further construction of the railroad. The decision was hailed as a victory for the principle of free competition and for the public interest.

The court also ruled on a number of other cases, including one involving the sale of a patent for a new invention. In that case, the court upheld the defendant's right to sell the patent, finding that it was in the public interest to allow the defendant to profit from the invention.

The court adjourned at 5:00 p.m., but is expected to resume its proceedings tomorrow.

Philadelphia, April 17.—The Supreme Court of the United States heard arguments today in a case involving the rights of women in the workplace.

The case, brought by a group of female workers, alleges that the defendant, a large manufacturing company, has violated the Equal Pay Act by paying its female workers less than its male workers for the same work.

The defense argues that the company has a policy of paying women less than men because of their lower qualifications and greater likelihood of leaving the company. The plaintiffs, on the other hand, contend that the company's policy is discriminatory and violates federal law.

The court heard arguments from both sides and is expected to issue its ruling in the coming weeks.

Philadelphia, April 18.—The Supreme Court of the United States today ruled in favor of the government in a case involving the sale of a patent for a new invention.

The case, brought by a large manufacturing company, alleges that the government has violated its right to use the invention by selling it to a competitor. The government argues that it is within its rights to sell the patent in order to benefit the public.

The court ruled in favor of the government, finding that it had the authority to sell the patent and that the sale was in the public interest.

Philadelphia, April 19.—The Supreme Court of the United States today ruled in favor of the defendant in a case involving the rights of women in the workplace.

The case, brought by a group of female workers, alleges that the defendant, a large manufacturing company, has violated the Equal Pay Act by paying its female workers less than its male workers for the same work.

The court ruled in favor of the defendant, finding that the company's policy of paying women less than men was not discriminatory and that the company was acting in accordance with its legitimate business interests.
